Missile Fired North of Hanoi

Fighters Tangle With MIGs

SAIGON, South Vietnam (AP) — U.S. fighter-bombers tangled with Communist MIGs on Saturday during a second day of raids on installations north of Hanoi, the U.S. Military Command reported today.

At the same time, headquarters announced that nine troops carrying U.S. Army helicopters were hit by Communist ground fire during an airborne assault by South Vietnamese troops only 21 miles west of Saigon. A spokesman said 10 American servicemen were wounded in the action.

Small Arms Fire

One of the helicopters was destroyed and the other eight sustained "moderate damage" but were able to fly to safety, headquarters said. Headquarters gave few details of the action except to say it occurred while the helicopters were lifting South Vietnamese troops to a landing zone.

Spokesmen said the landing zone had been shelled in advance by U.S. artillery and three air strikes to suppress enemy fire, but that heavy small-arms fire was encountered in the landing zone.

Elsewhere in South Vietnam, ground action continued lightly and scattered.

U.S. B52 bombers staged two raids before dawn Sunday on an enemy headquarters complex 94 miles east-northeast of Saigon.

In the air raids over the North, U.S. Air Force pilots sighted eight Communist MIGs during forays north of Hanoi.

One flight of F105 Thunderchiefs encountered two MIG17s as the flight was returning from pounding the Thai Nguyen army supply depot 38 miles north of Hanoi. One of the U.S. planes fired an air-to-air missile at the MIGs and the pilot reported that the missile followed the MIGs as they disappeared into haze.

U.S. spokesmen said the MIGs were not seen again but made no claim that either of the MIGs was shot down.

U.S. B52 jets blasted enemy holdings three times Saturday in the Quang Ngai sector of South Vietnam, on the coast 320 miles northeast of Saigon, after Communist troops had inflicted heavy casualties on an 11-man Marine patrol south of Quang Ngai.

The quick blows by the eight-engine Stratofortresses came as briefing officers disclosed fresh American fighter-bomber strikes north of Hanoi and Haiphong. These were executed through intense flak Friday afternoon.

Two weeks of bad weather that limited raids largely to North Vietnam's sea front and southern panhandle.

While short, scattered engagements marked ground fighting, smoke poured up from explosions and fires, believed touched off by Viet Cong saboteurs, at the U.S. Army's sprawling Long Binh munitions depot, 14 miles north of Saigon. Spokesmen said two Americans had been injured.

The U.S. Command also reported that a Viet Cong demolition charge, set off in the night, had destroyed the quarters of Communist troops at this time.

Move Toward Break

Riotous week-long Chinese demonstrations at the Soviet Embassy in Peking, and Chinese charges of alleged police beatings of Chinese students and diplomats here appear to be moving the two countries toward a break in relations.

At the same time East European foreign ministers are due to meet in East Berlin Monday to discuss relations between the East bloc and West Germany. Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko is due to attend the East Berlin session instead of accompanying Kosygin to London.

Losing Ground

The Soviet Union is described as anxious for a Vietnam peace settlement but unwilling to push Hanoi to the conference table.

Hanoi is reported apprehensive about losing ground at new peace talks. Some diplomats here express the belief the Russians want to avoid the risk of pushing Hanoi to the conference table and later accepting blame for possible Hanoi disappointments.

At the same time the Foreign Ministry announced that 200 wives and children of Soviet officials and teachers of the Soviet school in Peking were being summoned home. Forty of them returned to Moscow Saturday.

Some Remain

The announcement said 60 male officials were remaining at their Peking posts.

There was no immediate reaction from Red China, which itself is embroiled in an internal power struggle between Communist Party leader Mao Tse-tung and President Liu Shao-chi. Liu is accused of favoring a Soviet brand of communism which the Chinese call revisionism.

A Tass, Soviet news agency, dispatch from Peking said pro-Mao Red Guards continued their demonstrations outside the Soviet Embassy. The news agency added that a Soviet Embassy bus had been halted by several thousand Chinese, some of whom were shouting slogans.

Soviets' Patience With Red Chinese Is Wearing Thin

MOSCOW (AP) — Some diplomats here view prospects for any Vietnam breakthrough as dim during Premier Alexei N. Kosygin's visit to Britain Monday, despite some London optimism.

These diplomats have higher hopes that Kosygin's visit will develop further East-West trade, European detente and progress on disarmament questions.

But they paint a rather gloomy picture of the prospects for any spectacular breakthrough toward a Vietnam peace.

Part of the reason is the current Soviet preoccupation with relations with Red China and West Germany, which could preclude new Soviet initiatives on Vietnam at this time.

Response to LBJ's Plea Not Evident

WASHINGTON (AP) — A high government source reported Saturday Hanoi is sticking to demands for a permanent halt in North Vietnam bombings despite President Johnson's offer to "go more than halfway" to end the war.

This source said so far there had been no indications in subsequent delicate diplomatic probes of any Communist response to Johnson's Thursday news conference statement that the United States recognizes both sides will have to make "certain concessions" to get peace.

He did not foreclose, however, the possibility that secret talks may yet bring some kind of response that could be pursued toward an ultimate break in Hanoi's intransigence.

'Delicate Phase'

Presidential adviser Walt W. Rostow also spoke Saturday of "an extremely interesting and delicate phase" of diplomatic peace probes in the wake of Johnson's latest statement.

Rostow added it is not clear to him whether this effort to determine whether Hanoi is seriously

'All Systems Good' On Lunar Orbiter 3

Photos Due From Moon By Feb. 15

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP) — Lunar Orbiter 3 rocketed moonward Saturday night to photograph the exact sites where U.S. astronauts may land, as America's man-to-the-moon program pressed on despite the Apollo 1 tragedy nine days ago.

Officials hoped the spacecraft would swing into orbit around the moon on Wednesday and gather enough evidence on film during the next 30 days for scientists to decide exactly where it is safe for spacemen to set foot on the lunar surface.

The craft, a duplicate of Lunar Orbiters 1 and 2 which photographed in striking detail millions of square miles of the moon's front and back sides, blasted off at 8:17 p.m. EST as the payload of a powerful Atlas-Agena rocket.

"All systems are looking good," a space agency spokesman said as the 103-foot-tall booster thundered skyward, gushing a great fiery tail which lit up the nighttime darkness around Cape Kennedy.

Several hours of tracking would be necessary, however, to assure the spacecraft was on a proper course.

Lunar Orbiter 3's flight plan called for it to cover the 231,615 miles to the moon in approximately 92 hours, triggering a spacecraft motor Wednesday afternoon to swing it into orbit around the moon. It was to begin taking pictures Feb. 15 from altitudes as low as 28 miles.

All-Purpose Holiday to Start

SAIGON, South Vietnam (AP) — The Year of the Horse gives American servicemen to be on from the Vietnamese army.

Suddenly the Moon Is Far, Far Away

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP) — Suddenly, the moon seems far, far away.

A few weeks ago, almost everything was rosy. The Gemini program had been completed successfully with 10 two-man flights. National Aeronautics and Space Administration officials confidently predicted the United States would meet its goal of landing men on the moon by 1970. Privately, some were forecasting a 1968 manned lunar expedition.

Then things started to go wrong. Not little things, but big things that cost millions of dollars, lots of time—and the lives of three astronauts.

The problems do not rule out a moon trip in this decade. But they squeeze the timetable.

The first major problem was the explosion of a second stage of the giant Saturn 5 rocket that is to start astronauts on the way to the moon. The fuel tanks of an Apollo craft ruptured in a test. A Saturn 5 third stage exploded in another test.

The first unmanned launching of a Saturn 5 was postponed from January until at least May.

Serious difficulty plagued the life support system in the Apollo 1 craft. The launching, which would have utilized the smaller Saturn 1 rocket, was delayed from last November until Feb. 21.

But Air Force Lt. Col. Virgil I. Grissom and Edward H. White II and Navy Lt. Cmdr. Roger B. Chaffee never had a chance to fly. They died on the ground Friday evening, Jan. 27 when a mysterious fire flashed through their spacecraft cabin, melting metal with its 2,500-degree fury.

They were trapped with no way of escaping from such a blaze.

Why no escape? That's one of many questions raised in the aftermath of the tragedy.

Here are others:

Why does the United States continue to use pure oxygen, with its recognized fire hazard, as the breathing system in its spaceships?

Was the Soviet government correct when it said there was "an element of haste in the entire U.S. moon program?" Sources report some tests have been eliminated from the Apollo program in order to maintain a schedule.

Just how safe and how thoroughly planned were the procedures used on pad 34, site of the fire?

NASA and a board of review have thrown a secrecy blanket over the investigation.

The first preliminary findings were released Friday night by Dr. Robert C. Seamans Jr., NASA deputy administrator. The report said that no cause had been found for the fire—and may not be for some time. The report also indicated that smoke rather than fire killed the three astronauts.

But word of some of the things that happened on the fateful day have leaked out through reliable sources.

Grissom, White and Chaffee entered the spacecraft atop a Saturn 1 rocket at the 218-foot level of pad 34 at 1 p.m. to conduct tests and to practice some phases of the countdown. The hatch was closed at 2:50 p.m.

When the countdown reached three hours before simulated liftoff, the astronauts noted a rancid odor in the cabin. The count was halted and the cabin purged with oxygen. The mysterious odor vanished. Could it have been a contaminant that contributed to the fire?

Throughout the count, command pilot Grissom complained of poor communications. At one point, he reportedly said: "If I can't talk to you five miles away, how can we talk to you from the moon?"

The cabin was pressurized with pure oxygen to 16.2 pounds

Modern Tactics Terrorize Sardinians

EDITOR'S NOTE—Banditry the mad dog. Ahi! They think they have reached new heights in Sardinia, and more than 4,000. They were lamenting the em-poly and troops are in pursuit. But killing, kidnapping and ex-tortion are hard to stamp out. even with armored cars, heli-copters and walkie-talkies. Ter-ror grips the Italian island, so much so that no photographer could be found brave enough to get pictures for this story.

By JAMES M. LONG

CAGLIARI, Sardinia (AP) — There have always been bandits in the dark, mountain valleys of Sardinia, but now they have gone modern. The countryside is in terror.

During the past year Sardi-nia's feud killers laid aside the shotgun and took up machine guns for their vendetta slayings. Traditional sheep rustling and minor extortion gave way to big ransom kidnappings of wealthy landowners and industrialists. The unwritten law that kidnap victims should not be killed was forgotten.

Last year was Sardinia's bloodiest in two decades. But the year began with two shepherds shot down at dawn of New Year's Day. It ended on New Year's Eve with a family of getaway cars from roadblocks three slain by machine-gun fire before their television set.

At their funeral in terror-rid-den Ollolai the blackshawled women mourners chanted a new chorus in an age-old dirge for the dead.

"It has been the year of the savage boar," the mourners keened. "It has been the year of the fished reciting orders on how the keened. "It has been the year of extortion money was to be paid, he asked a question about it. The orders were repeated word for word. He raised an objec-tion. Again the orders were re-peated. He said nothing and they were repeated again. He was listening to a tape recorder.

Sheep and cattle rustling have long been a way of life in the hill country with its seminoma-dic people. But in the past the rustling was largely symbolic. A herd owner could buy back his stolen stock. Price for return of 100 sheep was $800. And after he paid, the owner could count on being left "untaxed" by rustlers for several years.

Last year, however, the extor-tion demands were made with-out bothering with symbolic rus-ting, and were backed up with bloodshed.

Ten shepherds were among the year's dead. The warnings were grim. One shepherd and his boy were found dead beside their flock. The boy's body had been set afire.

Demands Soar

Ransom demands skyrocketed as the kidnapers seized wealthy men. Two reportedly paid ran-soms of $40,000. The amount might have been higher. Few kidnap victims talk afterward.

Police said undoubtedly hundreds of extortion demands had been paid without even a complaint to the law.

In the past almost all who were kidnaped came home safe-ly. There had been only two known cases since the war when kidnapers had killed. In both cases it happened when police stumbled upon the hiding places where the kidnap victims were being held. But last year alone two were slain, one stoned to death and the other shot.

The islanders knew the bloodstains of last year's 41 dead would spread over into this year. They always do. Under unwritten law of vendetta one slaying brings another. Some touch off chain killings that last for generations.

For some there is no escape but to leave the island. Authori-ties said 150,000 persons had moved away from Sardinia since 1960. Some sought better jobs and easier living. But for many it was a flight from fear.

Italians on the mainland sometimes have asked: Why have not the Sardinian people themselves put an end to it?

The islanders know. Many remember Domenico Buscarino, 50, a God-fearing Sarde who tried 12 years ago to end the killings. He called a meeting of feuding factions and appealed in the name of humanity for a one-year moratorium on murder.

As he rode home on his horse he was fatally shot in the back.

Armored Attack

The new forces were using armored cars, jeeps, walkie-talk-iest and helicopters. But the year began with two shepherds shot down at dawn of New Year's Day. It ended on New Year's Eve with a family of getaway cars from roadblocks three slain by machine-gun fire before their television set.

Kidnap victims discovered that they did not even hear the voices of their captors. One man held blindfolded in his captor's car told his story afterward.

When a sing-song voice fin-ished reciting orders on how the extortion money was to be paid,

The International Race is on to put the first super-sonic transport on the market — and eventually to dominate it. The British and French, jointly designing and building prototypes of their fixed-wing Concorde, are on schedule with Feb. 28, 1968, as the date for the jet's first flight. The American choice, a swing-wing Bo-

Can U. S. be Far Behind? Europe's Supersonic Plane Timed for Flight in 1968

By GRANVILLE WATTS
BRISTOL, England (AP) — On present figures, Concorde will cost $16.8 million each without spare parts. The U. S. jet is expected to cost double this. The French are designing and building the center fuselage and the wings at the Sud Aviation Works in Toulouse.

It happened once before, with the jet airliner race Britain was first, with the Comet, but the United States picked up the chips with the Boeing 707 and the Douglas DC8.

In the SST race, the British joined hands with the French, because of the vast costs and knotty engineering problems. Together they settled on the Concorde, a sleek bullet of a plane that will do the London-New York trip in just over two hours.

The Concorde is a fixed-wing type, even though the swing-wing is often credited to a British inventor, Dr. Barnes Wallis. American sources attribute the swing-wing more to the experiments of John Stack, back in the 1950s.

The United States hasn't even decided yet to build an SST, but has selected a Boeing swing-wing design if and when The final decision to proceed now rests with President Johnson and Congress. The Boeing design was chosen over a Lockheed fixed-wing type because of a belief that a swing-wing offers aerodynamic advantages.

Wing Recedes
In flight the wing, gradually recedes as speed increases, presenting less air resistance.

Says a spokesman for British Aircraft Corp. "The swing wing in a supersonic airliner is a terrific problem. We lowered our sights and decided to build something on the knowledge we have."

The Concorde prototype is due to fly a year hence, the Boeing SST is not expected to fly before 1971. The Anglo-French ship is designed to fly at 1,450 miles per hour, the Boeing about 1,800. The Concorde will carry 136 passengers, the Boeing about 277.

If the Boeing flies, some aviation experts here believe it could be the old story over again — the Europeans getting in ahead with a small aircraft which is overtaken by a bigger U. S. type.

"It could be that the Concorde will have the 1970s but lose out to Boeing in the 80s," one observer said.

The Concorde development program was originally estimated to cost $476 million. This has rocketed to $1.4 billion, split down the middle between Britain and France.

The Concorde project, started under a Conservative party government, was almost killed when the Labor party won the general election in 1964. Harold Wilson, the new prime minister, called for a review of the program. President Charles de Gaulle warned that France would go to the World Court if the British pulled out. Britain backed down. Now the Wilson government has come around to cherish the Concorde as a winner.

Orders In
To date, 15 world airlines have placed orders for a total of 69 Concorde, valued at more than $12 billion.

"We are working on the assumption that Concorde will make something in excess of $200 million a year for at least seven years," said Pat Burgess, British sales chief for Concorde. He forecast a market by 1975.

first prototype, called 001, at Toulouse. At Bristol the rear fuselage and fin is completed on the second prototype, 002.

"There's really no difficulty in working on different pieces in Britain and France," said a BAC official.

"It's just as if the pieces were in separate hangars. We have French Liaison people working with us and there are Britons at Toulouse. The whole thing has worked out well."

Premium Fare
BAC official John Clark admits that there will have to be a premium fare on Concorde.

"This is to protect the subsonic airliners. We anticipate a rush to get on Concorde when she first enters service," he said.

The one big problem ahead is the sonic boom — caused when an aircraft breaks the sound barrier.

The problem will not affect Britain as the Concorde will be well out over the Atlantic before she becomes supersonic. But if the Concorde is to carry on westward across the United States to San Francisco, the sonic boom will occur over land.

"People seem amazed, but we don't really know what to expect on this before Concorde flies," Clark said.

The Americans do. Sonic boom tests around Oklahoma City have shown that the sound waves can shatter windows and nerves at the very least.

Clark said BAC is not worried about competition from Boeing's 747 jumbo jets, designed to carry an estimated 500 passengers.

This plane, now being built, is not supersonic. "They are going to get on Concorde when it appeals to a different sector of the market," Clark said.

"Our first passengers will undoubtedly be businessmen who want to cross the Atlantic quickly."

"But we would draw attention to a recent survey among passengers which showed the ideal of supersonic flight was 'favorable' by a wide margin."

Clark said a typical comment was: "Getting there as fast as possible is the reason for flying."

The Soviets are also in the supersonic race. A model of the Soviet TU144, shown at the 1965 Paris air show, looked remarkably similar to the Concorde.

Like Concorde, the TU144 has a fixed wing. It is designed to carry 121 passengers and cruise at 1,500 miles per hour. The Soviets hope to fly it in 1968, perhaps before the Concorde.

But, in the long run, will Boeing beat them all?

Illinois Women Hurt In Three-Car Crash In Town of Neenah
OSHKOSH —An 80-year-old woman and a 33-year-old wom- an, both from E. St. Louis, Ill., were injured in a three-car crash on U.S. 41 in the Town of Neenah Friday night.

Louella Ploudre, 80, received face cuts and Ardell Pitt, 33, received injuries to an ankle. Both were taken to Theda Clark Memorial Hospital.

Both were passengers in a car driven by William Pitt, 56, St. Louis. Another passenger, Arthur E. Ploudre, 90, also es- caped injury.

State police said Pitt was driv- ing north on U.S. 41 when a car in front of him, driven by Ren- ald J. Balanzs, 27, 1005 W. Grant St., Appleton, hit the right side of a bridge over Breeze- wood Lane.

Police said the Balanzs' car then skidded sideways across U.S. 41. Pitt's car hit the side of the Balanzs car. A third car, driven by Raymond E. Ranier, 427 S. Warner St., Appleton, al- so hit the Balanzs car, in the right rear.

Police said the road was win- dowed and that vision was hin- dered by blowing snow.

with a coin placed on it in a cloakroom—and placed there by the butler himself—is flagrant tapping.

One of Mr. Reeve's most splendid butlers is Payne. It is very difficult to live up to Payne. For one thing he was once the butler of Mrs. Wallis Warfield Simpson, now the Du- chess of Windsor.

"I believe I was the second person to know of the king's de- cision to abdicate," he once re- called. "Those were very trying times for us all."

Payne is a thin, waspish, pa- trician who, when necessary, can freeze the new rich or the untutored with a tone of voice as icy as 20 below zero.

Not long ago a young butler spoke to Payne in what Payne considered a tone of lese ma- jeste.

"He told me that he had served the queen—and that he'd had no complaints," said Payne. "I said, 'Young man, I have served her majesty, and her mother and her grandmoth- er. So don't you tell me about serving the queen.'"

"I can assure you I had no more nonsense from him. Served the queen, indeed."

Because of the temptations provided by their surroundings—plenty of drink and easy ac- cess to the bubbly—butlers sometimes fall from grace.

Spanked M'Lady

Buttling circles tell a story about one of their number who got so lit up on a grand occasion that he put the wife of his noble employer across his knee and spanked her.

Old-fashioned butlers still wince at the terrible memory of a gentleman's gentleman who got so stoned before a certain dinner that he entered the din- ing room naked except for a starched collar and white tie. The guests ignored the boiled butler—at least through the Payne. "I said, 'Young man, soup course. That, sir,'" commented one of the old-fashioned ones. "is sang froid of a superior quali- ty."

What happened to the culprit? "On his way out he hardly got a good reference."

Britain's brain drain has al- most been matched by what could be called the Payne drain.

Peter Hunt, of the Hung-Reg- ina Agency, knows of an Ameri- can family who asked for an experienced butler to take charge of a house with 26 em- ployes under him. The family is at home only 12 weeks out of every year. The pay—$650 a month. In England the same man would be paid about $250 a month.

There once was a squadron leader who resigned from the Royal Air Force, attended a butler's school and sailed across the Atlantic to work as a gentle- man's gentleman for $500 a month. His wife worked as a maid in the same household for $300 a month. After 10 years in A m e r i c a—including Palm Beach in the winter and Maine in the summer—he returned, built a house and retired. Question Practices of Recruiting Personnel In State Government

BY JOHN WYNGAARD
Post-Crescent Staff Writer
MADISON — A serious strug- gle inside the state government about personnel recruitm e n t practices and the rising ratio of employees hired outside the classified civil service system will flash into public view with the forthcoming report and rec- ommendations to the legislature of a blue-ribbon civil service ad- visory committee.

The "classified service" con- sists of those many thousands of officials and workers, the ma- jority in the state government system as a whole, who are re- cruited through competitive ex- aminations, and have job secur- ity once they are installed and during their good behavior. The unclassified service includes those who are appointed, with- out the formality of testing and competition.

The ratio of the latter is growing largely because of the appointment of hundreds of public sale the 150 or so cus- non - academic employees and pidors, huge, heavy brass mod- officers of the state universi- els, that had adorned the legis- ties. Many of them get higher pay than men and women in equal assignments in the classi- fied service, a fact which rank- les. The proposal to the legis- lature will be to tighten up the rules, and to limit unclassified appointments severely.

The favored recruiting posi- tion of the schools is resented especially by those other agen- cy administrators who have in- creasingly found their own staffs being raided through the lure of higher pay and privi- leges in the educational institu- tions.

An engineer in any other state department must compete in a formal test for his appointment. No such requirement applies if he goes to work for an educa- tional institution, which also hires accountants, public city men, professional and technical workers of all kinds, without the limitations of the merit system rules.

An ironic footnote about the contradictory system is being gal for a political party to go told around the capitol by en- into debt may be suggested by vious administrators. The "no tax" pledge of the Knowles administration is not as literal as it may have been made to appear, some legis- tive observers, are learning up- on closer examination. The gov- ernor has offered a bundle of miscellaneous proposals to raise taxes to the state on a more fees and assessments in the reg- frequent basis. The new state alutory services. Some of the proposals coming into the legislature regularly are noteworthy mostly for the infinite patience of their authors. An example is a bill to set up a licensing and public supervi- sion code for auctioneers, which turned up again last week as it has in each legislative term for a couple of decades at least.

There are some things that simply cannot be done until the last minute, and members of the Panathenaea Society of the Greek Orthodox Church wanted their dinner to be perfect. Mrs. Nick Savas served eggplant casserole to Mrs. George Sattler as guests at last Sunday evening's Vasilopeta dinner passed along the buffet line. Panathenaea Society members made the food, sometimes with a thoughtful assist from husbands and daughters.

Greeks Honor St. Basil

It was informal and warm-hearted, as if the entire Greek community had extended its hand and said, "Welcome". In effect, it did just that, and while it could not conjure the hills or green valleys of its much loved Mediterranean homeland, Greece was nevertheless 'there' Sunday evening when the Panathenaeon society sponsored its 'Evening in Greece'.

The nation was evident in bits of overheard but not understood conversation; in tall, dark-haired men who could easily be envisioned standing on a Greek hill at dusk; in young women in long white robes girdled in gold ribbon; in the aroma of roast lamb, grape leaves, sweet bread and rich pastries; in ferns arranged to form a small center section in the dining room; in dancers who moved gracefully there to the strange and melodious balalaika; in the thick sweet taste of Turkish coffee, and in the smiling faces of women who thoughtfully saw to every guest's comfort and pleasure.

This is the second year the Panathenaeans have given the Vasilopeta dinner. It is keyed to the feast of St. Basil, which is celebrated at the beginning of the year. Spyro Gostas explained the occasion for the feast, and the tradition involved in 'St. Basil's Pie'. It began 1,700 years ago when a small Christian village was taxed in excess of its ability to pay, and, to save whatever wealth they had, villagers gave their wedding rings and coins to Bishop Basil for safekeeping. When the government realized how many and how strong the Christians were, the tax was revoked, but the Bishop did not know to whom the jewelry belonged. He ordered bread baked with the jewelry in the loaves, and when his parishioners were given the bread, each had his own treasure, and all of it.

Indian Guides Council--Heap Good Business!

BY LUCY CRAIG
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

They aren't summoned by tom-toms, but the call is just as urgent as it was when the sound of drums across the valley meant it was council time. The father who would rather lift his feet to a hassock than clad them in moccasins has to be strong indeed, for who can resist the anticipation and joy in a young boy's eyes when it's Indian Guides night?

The organization, sponsored by YMCAs throughout the country, is a home centered club program in which members in blue jeans and tennis shoes bear little resemblance to young Indian braves, the twice-monthly meetings are something they don't want to miss.

Close Relationship

A goal of the Indian Guides program is to build a closer relationship between father and son, as reflected in the national tribal slogan, "Pals Forever."

In most cases, tribes are organized by fathers with similar interests, such as living in the same neighborhood, going to the same church or with sons attending the same school. The program is available to youngsters in first, second and third grades.

There are 11 tribes in the Fox Cities' area. Each tribe chooses its own Indian name, and the braves, "big" and "little", select corresponding names such as Rising Sun and Setting Sun, Broken Arrow and Crooked Arrow and Red Fox and Gray Fox.

Reasons for Joining

A father may have many reasons for joining the Guide program.

"My business keeps me away from home at long periods of time. I want to get to know my son better. This program gives me the chance I need," says one young father.

"My son and I are already great friends," comments another. "The Indian Guides sets aside some additional time for us to spend together."

"My son has been rather shy around other people," says a tribal member. "This program has helped him forget himself and his shyness is quickly disappearing. In fact, I sometimes wonder if he'll ever stop talking," he adds.

The groups, which take the names of Indian tribes, meet at the homes of members. Special invitations are sent tribal members the weekend before the meeting. These are made by the father and son who are hosts of the council. The invitations might take the shape of canoes or tomahawks and are often constructed out of thin birchbark or wood. The message is usually written in Indian signs.

Hour Meetings

Meetings last no longer than an hour. They include a business meeting, a crafts period, often a game period, and refreshments. No father may attend without his son, nor may a son attend without his father. Both participate in all phases of the ritual and program.

Tribal offices are divided among fathers and sons. The chief is a "big" brave. He presides at all councils and is responsible for programs. The tom-tom beater is a "little" brave. His enthusiastic beating of a homemade drum is a sign to other members of the tribe that the meeting is Vests and Headbands are standard dress for members of Indian Guides. However, tennis shoes often are substituted for Indian moccasins. Above, Cheyenne Dennis Voigt, 'Little Moon,' sits in the tribal council circle. At right, Keny Lippold, known as 'Red Fox,' also a Cheyenne brave, enjoys playing a balloon game. Little incidents such as untied shoes are forgotten.

Tribal Tradition allows only the brave holding the "talking stick" to speak. Above, at the Huron Tribe's council, Darrelle Verkuilen, known as 'Big Wind,' has something to say and is given the stick by his son, Brian, 'Little Wind.' At right, the Hurons, wampum bearer, 'Standing Deer,' alias Noel Sheldon, and his son, Dick, whose tribal name is 'Running Deer,' check the amount of wampum in the tribal pouch.

Braves Devote Part of Each council to Indian crafts. Above, Daniel Militzer, 'Strong Eagle,' traces the foot of his son, Kent, 'Brave Eagle,' to determine his size. Huron tribe members are making horsehide moccasins which they will later decorate with beads. At right, James Zwack, alias 'Setting Sun,' and his son, John, 'Rising Sun,' members of the Cheyenne Tribe, put the finishing touches on their replica of a teepee. (Post-Crescent Photos)

Nagging Wife Throttled by Her Own Words

LONDON (AP) — Justice Sir Neville Faulks granted Francis Ford a divorce on grounds of cruelty Thursday after hearing a 90-minute tape recording of Ford's wife talking.

"To describe her nagging as being like water dripping on a stone would savor of modesty," commented Justice Faulks.

The court was told Ford, 51, put his wife's "torrent of words" on tape in a vain effort to shame her into silence.

In all the 90 minutes Ford uttered no more than 10 consecutive words, the judge said.

"Perhaps the most touching part of the whole tape recording was where the wife was ranting away about how she had taken the pledge not to drink," the judge said.

"A still, small voice was heard saying: 'I wish you had taken the pledge not to talk.'"

(Post-Crescent Photo)

Service, Panel Talks Friday United Church Women Tell World Day of Prayer Plans

Plans for their annual World Day of Prayer are being completed by United Church Women of Outagamie County. The prayer service is scheduled at 1:30 p.m. Friday at Memorial Presbyterian Church, 800 E. College Ave. "Of His Kingdom There Shall Be No End" is the theme of the annual event, in which members of area churches participate.

Committee members working through the last several weeks have announced that the offering this year will be used to continue the work of special Prayer Day projects. Among them is the Kinnard College for Women, Pakistan; Isabella Thoburn College, India; Ewha in Korea; Tokyo Christian Women's College and Christian radio programs in Lebanon. Also supported are books on family life, nutrition and scriptures in Asian and African languages and, in America, migrant and American Indian work and aid to international students.

Each affiliated group will be represented in the choir to sing at the service. Mrs. Eugene Britton, organist, will rehearse with the group at 7:30 p.m. Monday at Trinity Lutheran Church.

Women interested in exploring avenues of Christian cooperation in Outagamie County have also been invited to participate in the ecumenical meeting scheduled at Memorial Presbyterian that morning. At 10:30 a.m. a panel will discuss community needs and opportunities. Speakers will be Mrs. LaVerne Gallitz, general chairman; Mrs. Gordon McIntyre, speaking for the Outagamie County Hospital and Golden Age Home; Lt. Booth Wood, the Salvation Army; Martin Gilbertson, Lutheran Welfare; Mrs. James Vahey, W.I.C.S. cooperation, and Mrs. Maxine Vanevenhoven, the Family YMCA.

Each speaker will be available for small group discussion after the panel presentation.

Both Programs

For the convenience of women who wish to attend both morning and afternoon programs, the women of the host church will serve dessert and coffee. Women may bring their own sandwiches.

Mrs. Herschell Martin is chairman of the Day of Prayer committee, assisted by Mrs. Robert Rosenberg, publicity; Mrs. Britton, music; Mrs. Holland Magee, participants, and Miss Edith Rechevyl, host church.

Plans for Living Room Dialogues, carried out on a small scale last year, are again underway. Anyone interested in joining neighborhood discussion of how a common Christian heritage has been developed and diversified by time and denominationalization may contact Mrs. Edgar Dickey.

Captivated by 'Cross Country Nursing

BY JEAN OTTO

Post-Crescent Women's Editor

"It gets in your blood," Miss Mary Coppes says of her job as a member of the crew of the Santa Fe Railway.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Coppes, 911 Crooks Ave., Kaukauna, rides the rails between Chicago and California. A registered nurse who received her degree from Presbyterian-St. Luke Hospital School of Nursing, Chicago, she is a courier nurse, working under the general passenger department of the line. She makes three round trips a month from Chicago, either on the El Capitan to Los Angeles or to San Francisco on the Chief. She loves it.

The dark haired young woman brings to her job as traveling nurse a varied experience in her field. After graduation she worked at Passavant Hospital in Chicago, and then did camp nursing at a military school and summer camp at Lake Geneva. She also worked for the Chicago Truck Drivers Union, then at a hospital in Pasadena for two years in pediatrics. She came home to Kaukauna to help nurse a family member who was ill, and stayed on to work in surgery at Kaukauna Community Hospital. She had had a previous short employment with the railroad before coming home, and the lure to go back was strong. So Miss Coppes packed her bag and went on the road again.

Important Too
She can always settle down to hospital nursing she says, noting that most hospitals are understaffed and nurses must often work 10 or 12-hour stretches. She knows how important hospital work is, and she likes it, but says her own job is important too.

Among duties Miss Coppes carries out on her trips to the coast are helping mothers traveling alone with children. She makes formula and baby-sits when mothers feel they need a little time away from their youngsters. Because the trains are high level and there are stairs to climb, she also keeps a special eye on the elderly, and looks out for the travelers who have cardiac problems, diabetes, asthma, or who may have difficulty with the altitude. When someone becomes ill, she does whatever she can, and says that one of her most important obligations is to provide courteous and friendly service to all passengers.

Can Call Ahead
The Santa Fe has doctors available in cities along its routes so that, should it be necessary, the train crew can call ahead for emergency aid. Either a traveler is treated at a stop, or placed in a hospital until well enough to continue or return home.

Miss Coppes says a courier nurse doesn't operate out of a station on the train. Instead, she roams the length of the train, being helpful whenever she can. Many people who have small health problems become very nervous when traveling, often to the point where they are unable to handle situations they face with ease at home. For some, the trip is about over before they calm down. She says she sometimes feels she walks across the country as she moves from one end of the train to the other, but admits she makes many friends, because there is time to chat and get acquainted.

Not the Same

The young woman says that people traveling are quite different from when at home. They tell their most intimate problems to perfect strangers. To one traveling as much as she it gives a chance to see the kinds of lives people live and to realize how insignificant most worries are.

The nurse also says she's learned where people come from by their accents and attitudes. The Easterner is much more aggressive than the person from the Midwest, who may be extremely quiet and shy. She's traveled the Super Chief with movie personalities and their families and found most of them to be courteous and friendly. The only "celebrities" not that way are those insecure in their positions.

More At Ease

Almost everyone who travels feels better for having a nurse aboard. In the summer a train to the coast may have as many as 10 or 15 children traveling without adults. When this happens, each is the nurse's total responsibility, from supervising their spending money, to making certain they have their meals to checking them off at the proper place and seeing they have been met. She jokes she hasn't lost one yet.

Upon arrival on the coast, courier nurses have a two-day layover. She likes Los Angeles, where she has many friends from her days in Pasadena, but loves San Francisco because there's so much to see and do there.

She says the trip is always different and offers something new to see each time. On the El Capitan there is a mile-long tunnel near the Colorado-New Mexico border that ends in a most beautiful panorama of nature, with deer and other animals on the snow-covered mountain. Flat New Mexico is beautiful in the evening, or after a shower when a rainbow begins on one horizon and follows over the train to the other. She doesn't know where she'd eventually like to settle down, but she loves Wisconsin and always wants to be here in the fall.

Considered Airlines

At one time, while in nurses' training, Miss Coppes says she considered a career with the airlines. Now she's happy on the ground. Requirements are greater for the courier nurse service, although similar in many respects. A young woman must have six months nursing experience after graduation, be between 21 and 28 years old when joining, be between five feet three and five feet seven inches tall, weigh between 110 and 130 pounds, be single, able to pass a physical examination and wear glasses only for reading. Besides that, she must have a pleasing personality, judged on the basis of interviews.

Miss Coppes works 12 days a month. She has a five-day layover when she returns to Chicago, when she usually visits her parents and two married sisters.

Never Bored

The Santa Fe, she says, has had courier nurses since 1947, and now has 26. There are two trains a day going each way and three to four nurses are on relief duty, in case one of the regularly scheduled cannot keep an assignment. It's a job that can be hectic, but Miss Coppes says there's never time to be bored or restless as one might in the same place. Besides, being the only woman member of a train crew brings lots of attention. When she's not traveling, she wonders about many of those who have become good friends, and says she has no plans to do anything else.

There are other advantages too. Many of her Wisconsin friends spent up to $400 to see the Packer game in L.A. There at the time, Miss Coppes spent $1. for a Packer button, just to let people know which side she was on.

Car Pool Commuter Dislikes Attentions of Aging Casanova

BY ANN LANDERS
DEAR ANN LANDERS: I work at a big plant here in Pittsburgh and like most every one else I ride to and from the plant in a car pool.

A middle-aged Casanova always manages to sit next to me. Since three of us sit in the front and three in the back, we are packed in pretty close together. Casanova always manages to get his leg next to mine and push a little. Or he hooks his arm under my arm. Yesterday my foot hurt so I took off my shoe. He slipped off one of his shoes and put his foot right on top of my foot.

The other passengers in the car would be very surprised if they knew what the old goat was up to. How should I get the message across to him that I don't appreciate his little tricks? I'd like to be subtle if possible. — Squashed

Dear Squashed: Why be subtle? The next time the old gaffer chums it up, give him a swift kick in the shins — and keep your shoes on, Girl.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: Last Sunday I wasn't feeling very well, the dishes were in the sink and the house wasn't in the best shape. Some friends dropped in unexpectedly as I was getting the baby ready for bed.

Landers

My husband greeted the guests with this: "I hope you will excuse the way the place looks, but my wife hasn't cleaned the house ever since the baby came." He must have sensed their surprise at this insult so he tried to fix it up by adding, "She used to be an immaculate housekeeper but things have sure changed around here."

I was very hurt and let him know it after the company left. He said, I should have apologized for the looks of the house, then he would not have had to say anything. What is your opinion of this? — Upset

Dear Up: When unexpected company drops in and the house is a mess the unexpected company should apologize.

It was thoughtless and inconsiderate of your husband to criticize your housekeeping before the guests, particularly when you are caring for a new baby. He should have given you some good, old-fashioned moral support in stead of belittling you and putting you down. In fact, he might even try doing a little housework.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: Every one seems to end up airing their pet gripe in your column sooner or later, so here is mine:

Why do people in restaurants order the lobster or the steak, as if it were the last one in the place? When I hear someone ask for the apple pie I expect them to get the whole pie but somehow the waitress knows it's only one piece they want.

Yesterday I almost collapsed when a woman said to a waiter, "I'll have your liver with onions, please."

Why don't people listen to themselves? The stupidity of the average person makes me sick. — Queen Ruth

Dear Queen: We have over 375,000 men in Vietnam, shop lifting has become a two and a half billion dollar a year "business," juvenile delinquency is at an alltime high and you are sick because someone orders the lobster. Will you settle for a get well card?

What is French kissing? Is it wrong? Who should set the necking limits — the boy or the girl? Can a shotgun wedding succeed? Read Ann Landers' booklet, "TeenAge Sex — Ten Ways To Cool It." Send 50 cents in coin and a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope.

Ann Landers will be glad to help you with your problems. Send them to her in care of this newspaper enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Feast of St. Basil Observed

A part of the proceeds of the dinner are slated to be sent to St. Basil's Orphanage and Academy at Garrison, N.Y., where needy children of Greek descent find homes and education, and teachers and secretaries are trained for Greek communities throughout this country. Among studies for both groups are the Orthodox faith, the Greek language and the history and traditions of their forefathers.

The Vasilopeta, or St. Basil's Pie, is a traditional part of the celebration, observed by Greek communities everywhere. The bread is blessed, and whoever finds the coin hidden in it is assured good fortune throughout the year. The Rev. Constantine Capoyiannes, who leads the congregation of 70 area adults and children, now in their new church, blessed the bread and cut it. He also had the good fortune of finding the coin.

The women of the congregation prepared all the food, with serving carried out buffet style. The table was laden with roast lamb, oven browned potatoes, meat balls wrapped in grape leaves and served in both lemon and white sauce; egg plant casserole; a macaroni casserole; a spinach, rice and tomato casserole; white cheese; yogurt; black green olives; tossed salad; jello salad; sweet bread; honey puffs; powdered sugar cookies; honey nut pastry, honey nut roll and coffee. The line was long and several hundred waited to be served. Among them were a group from Lawrence University that numbered four last year and grew to 24 this season; former mayor Clarence and Mrs. Mitchell, Mrs. Roy Hauert, Mr. and Mrs. Donald Day, Harold Froehlich, the Jack Zahns, the Verner Haags, the Donald Hovdes, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Seaborne Jr.

There was plenty of food for 'seconds', but many who would have liked to simply declared they could not. Punch was served after dinner, while, informally, Greek dancers left their tables to join the line that circled the center of the floor.

Told Future

A bit of gypsy mysticism was added to the party by Andreas Lambrou who came to Green Bay last summer from Piraeus, Greece. The young man, wearing a Turkish turban made by Mrs. Samuel Khoury, learned from his grandmother the art of reading the residue in the bottom of the Turkish coffee cups. His comments and predictions included the advice that the fortunes shown in cups read on Mondays and Fridays will always come true, and are likely to on other days. Mr. Lambrou, who speaks little English, read the cups in Greek, with Mrs. George Retson translating for him. Those whose cups were read came to scoff, but many of his predictions, such as a child in the future of a wife who only two weeks ago found she was pregnant, at least put a dent in their credibility gap.

The success of the dinner was attested by those who stayed for the entire evening, watching the dancers and occasionally daring to join the group. Others lingered to visit with friends or to watch the dancing, or simply because the urns of flowers and bits of sculpture, coupled with the pink and white decor at the tables, were a relaxing Sunday evening with a difference.

Planned Event
Mrs. Spyro Gostas, who baked the Vasilopeta bread this year, and Mrs. George Retson were co-chairmen of the evening. Working with them were Mrs. Philip Retson, decorations chairman, and her committee, composed of Mrs. Nick Savas, Mrs. Leon Kusserow and Mrs. James Smyrneos; tickets, Mrs. Andrew Jimos, who also handled publicity and music, with Mrs. Donald Dake, who also made the menus. Mrs. Dake and Mrs. Ted Pappas helped with music arrangements. The Greek costumes worn by the girls were designed and made by Mrs. Pete Petros. Those who served were Helen Pappas, Maria Pappas, Pam Karras, Sandy Petros, Nancy Retson, Cynthia Smyrneos, Diane Gostas and Kathy Gostas.

All Fanatheneae members prepared the dinner. Club officers are Mrs. George Retson, president; Mrs. Leon Kusserow, vice president; Mrs. Philip Retson, secretary, and Mrs. Nick Karras, treasurer.

Don't You Think She Deserves a Bigger or Better DIAMOND?

A Common Sense Approach . . .

The Chase Manhattan Bank made a list of twelve daily household activities that American housewives perform. The bank broke down a wife's routine task, the number of hours she spends on each per week, the average hourly rate paid for these occupations on today's labor market, and the value per week on the market for each chore.

JOB	HOURS Per Week	RATE Per Hour	VALUE Per Week
Nursemaid	44.5	$1.25	$55.63
Cook	13.1	2.50	32.75
Dietician	1.2	2.50	3.00
Food Buyer	3.3	1.50	4.95
Dishwasher	6.2	1.50	9.30
Housekeeper	17.5	1.50	26.25
Laundress	5.9	1.90	11.21
Seamstress	1.3	2.50	3.25
Practical Nurse	.6	2.00	1.20
Maintenance Man	1.7	2.25	3.83
Gardener	2.3	1.55	3.57
Chauffeur	2.0	2.20	4.40
TOTAL	99.6		$159.34

Reported Peking Incident Shows Strength of Mao

Wall Posters Tell of Red Guard Capture, Humiliation of Liu, Wife

TOKYO (AP) — Mao Tse-tung's Red Guards have submitted President Liu Shao-chi and his wife to humiliation in Peking, forcing him to recite from the book of Mao's thoughts while standing on a table in a government park. The development, as reported by Peking wall posters, suggested Mao held the upper hand, at least in the capital.

Japanese dispatches from Peking said the wall posters reported the incident as taking place Jan. 26 in Chung Nan Hai Park where the State Council and the Communist Party headquarters are located. The park normally is restricted.

At the same time, Chinese Communist news media reported Mao met a visiting Albanian delegation presumably in Peking. A Yugoslav dispatch said photographs of Mao showed him looking well.

Location Mystery
The exact whereabouts of both Mao and Liu had been a mystery to the outside world for months. Liu had been reported to have set up anti-Mao headquarters at Shihkiachwang, about 190 miles south of Peking. There had been other reports that he was under virtual house arrest in Peking.

The wall posters and the reports on the Albanian functions indicated both Mao and Liu may be in the capital now.

Japanese analysts said the accounts of the humiliation of Liu make it appear that his days are numbered as China's president, a post Mao is seeking to regain after losing it in 1958.

But this would not necessarily mean the end of the anti-Mao movement across the nation, for many of Liu's proponents are believed still firmly entrenched.

The Japanese dispatches gave this account of the Liu incident as reported by the wall posters dated Jan. 28:

Taken to Rally
The gray-haired president and his wife, Wang Kuang-Mei, were taken to a mass rally inside the park district. They were denounced as "bourgeois reactionaries."

Liu was told to recite the first quotation from the red-covered book of Mao's thoughts. Mrs. Liu then faced the shouting crowd and was asked if her husband was able to do it. But he stumbled over the opening phrase and she had to prompt him. The quotation was:

"The force at the core leading our cause forward is the Chinese Communist Party. The theoretical basis guiding our thinking is Marxism-Leninism," the quotation says.

The crowd jeered and started firing questions at him. Again Mrs. Liu intervened. The posters said she tried to make excuses for him.

Liu was asked why he opposed Mao and he responded: "I am not opposed to the chairman."

He then was asked why he "created an anti-Mao, bourgeois reactionary line." His response was that he did so "to oppose Mao's thought."

The wall posters did not say how the incident ended.

Mexico City's Four Quints' Chances Dim

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Four surviving girls of quintuplets born Thursday in a remote Mexican village were reported in grave condition Saturday at a Mexico City hospital.

Dr. Luis Velasco Candano, director of the pediatric department of the huge medical center here, said the four survivors weigh only about two pounds each and added the mortality rate for such underweight children — par is around five pounds — is about 60 per cent in Mexico. The doctor said the poor conditions under which they were born contributed to his prognosis.

The children, in separate incubators, are under constant care of nurses, the doctor said. They were brought here by ambulance Friday.

Condition Good

The mother, Maria Flores de Ortiz, 23, was in another hospital ward and her condition was said to be good. The father, Pablo Ortiz, 30, also came to Mexico City with his father, Francisco Ortiz Montero, and his other children.

The babies were born in the village of Chavarría, south of Cuernavaca and 175 miles north of here, in an adobe house with dirt floors and no sanitary conveniences. One of the five girls, the third, was stillborn.

West Germans Drink 15 Billion Pints Beer

WIESBADEN, Germany (AP) — West Germans drank 15 billion pints of beer last year, a 40 per cent increase over 1965, the government reports. The average consumption per citizen was listed at more than 266 pints. The average for persons older than 15 was 346 pints.

Kazan-Komarek Was Surprised

NEW YORK (AP) — An American travel agent, sentenced to eight years in a Czech prison for operating a cold war spy ring, flew home to the arms of his wife Saturday, his freedom apparently won by a series of diplomatic maneuvers. "I don't know why I was released," said Vladimir Kazan-

Komarek, as he told newsmen of being on a clean-up detail "washing the floors" at 5 a.m. Saturday when he was told he would be set free.

Kazan-Komarek, 42, was reunited with his wife Dorothy in a delirious scene at Kennedy International Airport. Holding the dark-haired woman in his arms, he cried, "This is my greatest moment."

Waiting with Mrs. Kazan-Komarek was an aide to Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., who had sought the direct intervention of Czech President Antonin Novotny in the case.

Kennedy had been advised by an unnamed emissary to write personally to the president and aides were told later that his letter was instrumental in gaining Kazan-Komarek's release.

Movement in other diplomatic areas since the Wellesley, Mass., man was arrested in Prague on Oct. 31 also was believed to have played an important role.

The State Department began denying U.S. visas to most Czechs and it was made clear that American tourism and credits authorized Czechoslovakia through the Export-Import Bank might be cut off.

Called for Help
Monona policeman Lawrence Quamme heard the broadcast, sighted the car and radioed for help.

Another Monona policeman drove up and they forced the Tennessee car to the side of the road. Fifteen other policemen arrived and they ordered Swait out of the car before searching him.

It was then noticed that the rear end of his car was sagging. They obtained his key, opened the trunk and spotted the other three men, along with six guns and the bag of money. The group offered no resistance.

Filled Bag
Floyd La Coursiere, the store manager, said three men entered and forced him to fill a cellophane bag with money from the safe. Police said the trio then fled in a stolen car to the parking lot of another supermarket where a man waited at the wheel of an auto.

A short while earlier policeman Daniel Crawford, 35, had taken down the number of Swait's car because it had Tennessee plates and was parked in an area reserved for employees. When Crawford heard the radio report of the holdup, he drove to the parking lot of the second store, and noticed Swait's car missing. He radioed the license number of the Tennessee car to headquarters and it was broadcast in the area.

Reuther Holds Trump Card In Threat of UAW Secession

Auto Workers, Other Big Unions Might Change Meany's Thinking

DETROIT (AP) — The hyphen in "AFL-CIO" has served since its founding as a reminder that the two major houses of labor never have completely resolved their differences.

Now the AFL-CIO's largest union, the United Auto Workers, is threatening to erase the hyphen, which also has welded two onetime bitter enemies into the most powerful labor force in history.

The International Executive Board of the UAW Friday directed its four top officers to resign their positions with the AFL-CIO Executive Council, but stopped short of a final break.

However, it amended the agenda for an April 20-22 pre-bargaining convention to include discussion and action on a review of its relationship with the AFL-CIO, with the UAW's International Executive Board being authorized to take "whatever action in this regard will best serve the interests of the UAW, its members and the families, the entire labor movement and the nation as a whole."

Stormy Debate
These UAW actions climaxed months of stormy debate on policy within the AFL-CIO's governing Executive Council between George Meany, 73, president of the AFL-CIO, and Walter P. Reuther, 60, president of the UAW.

The threat of Reuther's 1.4-million member union to disaffiliate, however, was held by several in the top councils of the UAW as a move which the UAW hopes will "turn the AFL-CIO around in its thinking."

Of course, the latest action leaves the way clear for Reuther to lead his membership out of the AFL-CIO in April. There is no doubt the UAW convention will give him whatever he wants.

Meany reportedly made no immediate overtures to dissuade Reuther and the UAW from their course. He moved, instead, they said, toward deciding who to recommend for election in Reuther's place as an AFL-CIO vice president and executive council member.

'Not Ready Today'
A high-ranking UAW source said the executive board "is not ready as things stand today to recommend secession to the April convention." But the source would not rule out the possibility.

However, Reuther continues as head of the AFL-CIO's Industrial Union department, the largest within the parent organization ad containing most of the former CIO unions. These include the 1.2-million United Steelworkers, the International Association of Machinists and the International Union of Electrical Workers, among others.

There is no question Reuther is the dominant figure in this department and would want its support in any withdrawal action.

Architects of Merger
The American Federation of Labor, made up of craft unions such as those of the carpenters, the painters and the printers, and the Congress of Industrial Organizations, made up of single unions including everyone employed in an individual industry, were merged in December 1955.

Reuther and Meany were the architects of the merger. At the time pressure was growing in Congress for legislation to further curb crippling jurisdictional strikes developing as the two spheres of labor fought to expand.

Before that, Reuther and Meany had reached a no-raiding agreement to alleviate the battles being waged by some unions within their respective organizations to capture membership from those in the other organization.

No Intention
At the merger convention, Reuther nominated Meany for the presidency and it was generally assumed, but not confirmed, that he would succeed Meany.

In recent months, however, there have been increasing reports that Meany has ports that Meany has notion of seeing Reuther him and is aligning his name another as successor and when he retires.

The AFL was formed under the leadership of Gompers, a cigar maker claimed an initial membership of 316,469 from various craft unions.

William Green, a former, succeeded to the post in 1924 upon Gompers' death. Green continued as president until his death in 1952. He was succeeded by Meany.

The original president of the AFL was John L. Lewis, who pulled his United Mine out of the AFL because that craft unionism could be an obstacle to successful scale organization of 100,000 workers, especially basic industries as steel, rubber, petroleum and

With others joining in 1938, Lewis struck out to organize the CIO nationwide.

In 1952, Philip Murray, president of the CIO, was succeeded by Reuther as vice president.

In a burst of criticism, AFL-CIO Executive Council members, the UAW said, needs to "commit additional staff resources to a massive effort to win the economic and social justice for the exploited farm and factory workers and the working poor who are not citizens of America."

Lawrence Coed Treated to Winter Frolic at Aspen

BY SANDRA REDLOFF
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

A foot of snow falls within two days and skiing is rated "super excellent". In the classified ads women's ski boots are listed and also a large oxygen tank with an open face mask and gauge, for those who suffer oxygen shortages at high altitude. Swimming pools are rimmed with snow and a sauna completes an afternoon on the slopes.

Miss Nina Stoeckle, a student at Lawrence University, was whirled into a carnival of winter outdoor activities when she stepped from the plane in Aspen, Colo., Jan. 20. She had come as a queen candidate for the Winterskol week, the 16th annual celebration of the most important U.S. skiing area, sponsored by the Aspen Skiing Corporation.

The week-long event attracts vacationers and retreaters from California to Massachusetts, Miss Stoeckle says, but a vital part is the spirit of the 8,000 community members to whom mountains and skis are more than a means of earning a living.

Carry Torches

After meeting the other eight candidates — a Wellesley student, a professional New York model, beauticians from Chicago and Los Angeles, a secretary from San Francisco, a student in Washington, D.C., and an employee at Aspen, the opening event (a bonfire) was attended.

Old Christmas trees were tossed into a 30-foot blaze at the foot of Little Nell Mountain; fireworks exploded as the fire died and a hundred skiers wound their way down Aspen Mountain, with only the torches they carried visible. The queen candidates were introduced to Aspenites at a hockey game played between two groups of ski school instructors.

The Winterskol parade the next day was led through the downtown section of the city by 135 Aspen Ski School instructors in ski boots and jackets.

Everyone in Aspen, tourists and residents, seemed to be involved in the festivities. "King", an Aspen St. Bernard, pulled 750 pounds of dead weight and was named the champion of the dog weight-pulling contest. Single women competed against married women in a broomball contest.

There were sled dog races, a snow sculpture contest and children's races. Bids for the frilliest box lunches were held before a polka contest.

The nine-day week concluded with a five-hour exhibition program and a 2,000-pound Mulligan stew, prepared by 40 cooks. During the week, 36 events were held.

Ski divers alighted on Aspen Mountain and raced on skis to the bottom.

"How to Aspen Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow" was the theme of the week, celebrating the 30th anniversary of the "How to Aspen" pamphlet written by Robert Benchley. Aspen was discovered at this time by several winter sportsmen as the national spot for "skiing, bobsledding and snowball-throwing." Films were shown of skiers 30 years ago and of a new ski slope site.

Aspen, once a silver mining town is surrounded by 14 mountain peaks, some as high as 14,000 feet.

The evening after the arrival of the queen candidates, a ball was held and the queen, Miss Joan Chase, a student at Wellesley College, Boston, Mass. selected.

"Winning was not stressed," says Miss Stoeckle, "though the queen will return next year. We were all there to have a good time."

Dolls, Candy

To further add to the "Carnival atmosphere, Kewpie dolls were ordered from a supply house at Neenah and canes from New York. Mrs. Verhoeven constructed cotton candy using construction paper for the cone and pink tissue paper for fluff.

The production has actually become a family project, since Mr. Verhoeven is the choreographer for the show and the three children—Ricky, Steve and Patti—have minor roles.

"We wore long gowns, but the evening was casual. Everyone liked Joan and I admire the judges for their choice."

Escorts were ski instructors. During the week the girls attended contests to a ward trophies, pin name tags on jerseys and help with timings.

"There are more activities than one can take part in. Sometimes I just wanted to disappear into the crowd to become better acquainted with the people who live year-round at Aspen."

Days they were free to do as they pleased, Miss Stoeckle arose early for a morning of skiing, lunch at the slopes, skiing all afternoon and evening entertainment with the other girls.

'Lots of Tumbles'

It took two hours the first day for Miss Stoeckle, in a beginning skiing group, to reach the bottom of Butter-milk Mountain, for the students were stopped after each turn, each spill and sent on again with new encouragement. The second day she wanted to be on her own "...and I took lots of tumbles."

One day a skiing trip took the nine girls to the home of the president of the Aspen Skiing Corporation for a tea party.

Now such terms as snowplowing, traversing, a stem christiania and paralleling are said easily.

"Snow is powdery at Aspen ... different from the east, and skies are more blue there. It's whipping down a hill with my face to the wind that I love."

Many of the ski instructors are from Austria, Switzerland and Germany said the student. She enjoyed talking with them and describes them as "tanned."

Miss Stoeckle says there were no definite qualifications for the queen candidates, except that the girls be at least 20 years old. In November the public relations manager of Aspen Skiing Corporation, Buzz Bainbridge, presented programs of films and answers to questions in large cities throughout the U.S.

Candidate was chosen at programs, some by the applause received when they walked to the stage, others through interviews. Miss Stoeckle was selected when Mr. Bainbridge presented the program to the Lawrence University ski club. It all seemed a dream to her father, a doctor in Columbia, Mo., until it happened.

Student Again

Winter week in Aspen has given Miss Stoeckle a deeper love for skiing. "I learned there is so much involved in the skiing that looks so effortless." A member of Kappa Alpha Theta sorority, she also enjoys skating and swimming. "Outdoor exercise makes you feel so good," she says, her cheeks still rosy after the walk from class to Alsted House.

She is a student again, carrying books, studying for a week taken from a trimester for Aspen, stepping through Wisconsin snow in long, lace-woven stockings.

Quiet times, happy times will bring back memories of the Winterskol.

Letters Record a Year Abroad

BY SALLY NELSON
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

NEENAH — Miss Janice Johnson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Johnson, 129 May-er St., is keeping a day-to-day diary of her year overseas through letters to her parents.

Miss Johnson, studying in Geneva, Switzerland, through the "Junior Year Abroad Study" program of Smith College, Northampton, Mass., takes time from her studies to record daily adventures with the hope of eventually compiling them into a book.

Since her departure from the United States last fall, Jan has recorded each exciting incident, including meeting the passengers and crew of the S.S. Nieuw Amsterdam and operating the ship's whistle.

Holiday Traveling

Although studies occupy much of Jan's time, she is using her holidays and a second-hand motorbike to tour central Europe. Jan tells, in her letters, how the motorbike is more economical for travel since gas costs less than railway fares.

Jan also writes that by "going native" and eating sausage and roll suppers available at booths and "skellers," and avoiding "tourist" restaurants, she has been able to save extra funds for traveling.

Late last fall, Jan was invited by a friend, Mircille Reverdin, to visit the family's 400-year-old summer home in the Swiss mountains. The home, described by Jan as "a manse" contains 15 bedrooms, a library, a theater and a basement gun room with a secret passage leading to a nearby hillside exit.

During her visit with Mircille and her family, Jan also visited nearby cottages and was impressed by their hospitality and delicious cooking—including homemade, hand-cranked, ice cream.

Make-Shift 'Words'

The facilities of the United Nations library at Geneva, available to students, afford an opportunity to meet people from all over the world. Jan writes of amusing attempts to communicate, through a combination of English, French and sign language.

Miss Johnson describes her exasperation when she tried to explain to two young German barons, cousins of Prince Philip of Great Britain, the tradition of thanksgiving in the United States.

In honor of the day, Madame Legler, Jan's hostess in Geneva, prepared a turkey dinner "Italian style." Jan says she enjoyed the sentiment of the meal more than the highly-spiced flavor.

Christmas in Switzerland was much like that in the United States, Jan wrote her parents. She was impressed by the beauty of trees lighted with real candles and traditional Swiss carol singing.

Swiss Christmas

During the Christmas holiday Jan traveled to Zermot to ski and on New Year's attended the performance of the Vienna Philharmonic Holiday Concert. The concert was viewed in the United States through Tel-Star transmission.

Jan also plans to tour Greece at Eastertime and to visit Russia with other students and advisors this summer.

Adds Flourishes To Kitchen Tasks

A sponge cake batter that is usually baked in a 9-inch angel-cake pan may also be baked in three oblong pans (each about 11 by 7 by 2 inches). The oblong sponge cakes will need about half the baking time required for the one large cake.

Valuable Papers Require Care, Filing, Copying

NEW YORK, N. Y. — It is the same, for modern life is to be that valuable papers were kept in places known only to the hider. And even the hider was apt to forget. Who knows how many business contracts, deeds, birth certificates, marriage certificates and wills still languish in mattresses, book linings, or rusty cookie bins? They will probably perish there.

And today? Today are papers kept in safe deposit boxes, desk drawers? All too often not. For rare is the businessman who has not felt ulcerous over essential, but misplaced, documents... the office manager who has not torn her hair over a secretary's messy, paper-laden desk... or for that matter, the secretary who has not panicked over a missing letter that should have been filed and that her boss is impatiently waiting for her to find. In many offices, particularly those one-location small businesses, important papers still seem to have not found a place where to lay their yellowed heads.

And in many homes the story is the same, for modern life is papered with papers. The attic, closets, drawers and shoeboxes of the nation's homes are stuffed with essential and superfluous documents that could never be located in a pinch if life depended on it. Few housewives know exactly where to find the kids' birth certificates; few clubwomen can put their hands on last meeting's minutes at a minute's notice; few husbands have more than the slightest idea where 1960 cancelled checks are.

We may look at the disorder and say laughingly, "Next century, I've just got to get organized," but it's no laughing matter. One fire in the attic, one night of vandalism at the office, and you may have lost not only your peace of mind, but your family's financial welfare, and even your very identity. The time to get organized is now.

Basically there are three files every home-owner should have: family, home and automobile. The most valuable family documents should be placed in a safe deposit box. These include

Wife, Checkbook Greet Governor At Open House

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) — It started out as "little people's day" at the Capitol, but it ended up being "wife's day, too."

Gov. Lester G. Maddox has set up the first and third Wednesday of every month so that anyone in Georgia can see the chief executive.

Near the end of the line of more than 200 persons filing through the governor's office, Wednesday was Mrs. Maddox.

"I just want to shake his hand. I see him so seldom," she said.

She then did a wifely thing — she handed him a checkbook.

The governor signed. Mrs. Maddox said, "thank you," and then added, "just one."

birth certificates, marriage certificate, adoption papers, discharge papers, citizenship papers, deeds, automobile title, savings bonds, stock certificates and wills.

The originals of automobile records such as equipment warranties and insurance broker's card may be kept in the car glove compartment. Photocopies of the automobile title and insurance policy for the home files are advised.

Also suggested are photo copies of vital documents. In one file place copies of birth certificates, marriage certificate, adoption papers, discharge papers, citizenship papers and deeds. Reference records may be stored in home file two. These include social security number, income tax records, insurance policies, bank statements, cancelled checks, outstanding bills, appliance warranties, stock certificate numbers, savings bonds numbers and personal family records.

During the meeting, plans are made for future projects and camping trips are often scheduled.

"I don't think my son and I will ever forget our trip to Camp Nan-a-Bo Sho at Waukegan Lake! While we were out in a boat, a severe storm struck. Unable to get back to camp, we found the nearest shelter, which was an outhouse. For two hours, it was the only roof over our heads," says Kenneth Lippold, known as Red Fox to members of the Cheyenne tribe.

In spring, usually May, an area pow-wow is held.

"The youngsters really look forward to this event," says Wendell Smith, youth director at the YMCA. "At this time an induction ceremony is held for the new tribes and individual braves. Craft projects of individual tribes are judged and awards are given."

about to begin. Tallykeeper, or recording secretary, is a "big" brave. The Indian runner, a "little" brave runs tribal errands. Treasurer, or "wampum bearer" is a "big" brave.

Talking Stick

As the tom-tom signals the start of the meeting, boyish rough-housing and adult "shop-talk" ceases. The tribe, sitting in a circle, begins the council with a recitation of the organization's slogan and purposes. Before any tribal member can speak, he has to ask for the "talking stick," a piece of wood tribal members have painted and decorated with Indian designs. He is quickly silenced by the chief if he speaks when it is not in his possession.

Craft projects might include making beaded moccasins or small replicas of Indian teepees. One tribe made head-dresses out of turkey feathers purchased at an area farm and bits of wire.

Some Continue

"In most cases, tribes disband after the third year, although they don't have to. Some have continued to meet until the boys are 12 years old," says Mr. Smith. "It is not unusual for a father to belong to the Guide program for more than three years. Younger sons who have envied older brothers who have belonged, do their best to see that they too become a brave. Usually, the father is equally enthusiastic," he adds.

Periodically, fathers in the program have intertribal councils known as Log Houses. These meetings provide the opportunity for tribes to share experiences, instruction, leadership training and provide for fellowship and cooperation among tribes.

Special programs are occasionally planned, in which mothers and sisters are honored. These might be ceremonial dinners or programs explaining past or future events.

Indian ritual is also evident in the closing ceremony at each tribal meeting. The braves stand in a circle, raise their arms and ask the blessing of the Great Spirit.

Comradeship between father and son is the underlying purpose of the Indian Guides program. With Indian lore providing the atmosphere, father and son work together to widen interests, increase abilities and deepen purposes.

Valley Cities Join 'Alliance' Support For Sharing Taxes

Not Trying to Bypass Municipal League, but Members Critical

BY DAVE GFFEY
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

Officials from Wisconsin's largest cities, including Appleton, Oshkosh and Fond du Lac, are rapidly solidifying their stand on state tax sharing and property tax relief although they repeatedly deny their informal "alliance" is a splinter from the Wisconsin League of Municipalities.

At the first meeting of the Alliance of Cities in Madison

Jan. 4, the group chose Madison Mayor Otto Festge as chairman and City Manager Henry B. Buslee, Fond du Lac, was named secretary.

At that time they arranged for a two-day seminar to be held Feb. 15-16 in Oshkosh. Last Wednesday six cities of the "informal" group's members were invited to a discussion of revenue problems by Manitowoc Mayor Robert Rand.

While the interests of the League of Municipalities were mentioned constantly, it was obvious that the men at the meeting were representatives of large cities (the smallest represented was Wausau with a population of about 33,000).

Favor Annexation

They questioned their ability to act in formal parliamentary manner but unanimously voted to "go on record" in favor of unilateral annexation after a motion by Appleton Mayor George Buckley.

The League of Municipalities is a large group with many village members as well as large cities.

While members of the Alliance of Cities have vowed that they are not attempting to circumvent the league, some of them expressed rather pointed criticism of the league's methods.

Wausau Mayor John L. Kannenberg advocated an organization of the heads of large city governments.

Meet With Mayors

"If we want power, if we want to be able to support the league, we should meet with mayors of all communities," Kannenberg said. "If we want to get any voice in the state government, we better enlarge on this (the alliance) and we better get organized," he said at the Manitowoc meeting.

"We would have more power, if you care to use that term, with our congressmen and U.S. senators if we were united," the Wausau mayor said.

Some of the officials at the Manitowoc meeting expressed discontent with league conferences saying they were not informed beforehand of the issues to be discussed. The league sponsors a spokesman in both the state and federal lawmaking bodies. At the Manitowoc meeting, none of the persons attending knew the name of their lobbyist in Washington.

Buslee, however, was careful.

WSU-O Winter Carnival Queen Christine Borgwardt

From Wauwatosa

Attractive Blonde Named Queen of Winter Carnival

OSHKOSH — An attractive blonde sophomore from Wauwatosa, Miss Christine Lynn Borgwardt, and Titan varsity football player, Larry Cramberg, junior from Bloomington, Ill., were the reigning royalty for the close of Winter Carnival activities Saturday Night at Wisconsin State University-Oshkosh.

The two were chosen by a student vote and were crowned Saturday afternoon at the conclusion of the winter games competition in the area behind Read Elementary School. Cheers, whistles and a mad rush of students onto the ice to congratulate the couple was visual testimony of the popularity of the choice.

Miss Borgwardt, who will also be a contestant in the Miss Oshkosh pageant Feb. 25, was sponsored by Chi Omega Sorority. Cramberg was the candidate of Epsilon Fraternity. Other finalists were Shari Feutz, Waterloo freshman, Taylor Hall candidate; Sandra Stroessner, Port Washington senior, Alpha Phi; Ronald Schreier, Beaver Dam senior, Delta Sigma Phi; and Wallace "Buz" Barlow, Milwaukee senior, Sigma Tau Gamma.

The queen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Borgwardt, Wauwatosa, is a Donner Hall resident. She was one of the 10 best dressed coeds on campus for 1966 and was the 1966 state winner in the "make it yourself, with wool" contest. A singer and sports enthusiast, Christine was runnerup to the Wauwatosa girl who later became America's Junior Miss.

The royal couple and their court reigned over the Winter Carnival dance Saturday night, where the announcement of ice and snow contest winners and presentation of the President's Cup were made.

Outagamie to Open Group Foster Home

Finals Tonight

Mounting Excitement Grips Contestants for Miss Appleton Pageant

Ten pretty young women are feeling the excitement and pressure of being in a beauty pageant after a month of hard work and nervous tension.

Gathered at a reception Saturday night, the final time before the Miss Appleton beauty pageant tonight, were the trim contestants who will vie for the crown now worn by Miss Barbara Silwanowicz.

Poised and ready after days and weeks of practicing posture, styling hair, and applying make up as well as selecting the proper apparel, the nine young women who attended greeted their parents, relatives and friends at the tea, given in their honor by the Appleton Jaycees, the contest's sponsoring organization.

Still Shaking

"Actually, underneath it all, our knees are still shaking," said one contestant.

Missing from the group was Mary Ellen Nash, who broke two bones in her hand and wrist Thursday when she fell while practicing her act for the pageant. She will, however, be in the pageant.

This was just one of the many incidents that seemed to plague the Jaycees this year, according to Charles Bodmer, chairman.

On that same evening, the Jaycees also were informed that Sue Lust, another contestant, was in an auto accident on her way to rehearsals.

Contestant Unhurt

The car she was driving hit an icy spot on the road and skidded into a ditch. About $150 in damage was reported to the car but "Miss Lust came through in fine shape, though somewhat shaky," Bodmer said.

Two accidents just wouldn't seem complete so to add to the confusion, Lynn Otis, a pretty blonde, had operations on two toes about 18 days ago. But with persistence and a certain amount of pain, Miss Otis practiced her talent acts day after day.

"The final touch came when the main (arc) light went out in the Appleton High School, where the pageant is scheduled," Bodmer said.

Really Appreciate

"One doesn't really appreciate how hard it is to find an electrician at 5 p.m. on Saturday until something like this happens," he said.

But that too is fixed and everyone seems to be in fine shape and it looks like the pageant, which will begin at 8 p.m., again will be a success.

The seven other young women competing for the title are Lynn Cherkasky, Amy Clemens, Cheryl Frick, Adrienne Kulicko, Alanna Maynard, Sue Van Handel and Mary Weigt.

Plan to Invite Tourism Begun In Menominee

16-Week Course for Indian Tour Guides Will Start Feb. 11

A plan to develop parts of Menominee County for tourism and the training of Menominee Indians for tour guides, suggested last October by a Wisconsin State University-Oshkosh professor, is getting underway with a 16-week course beginning Feb. 11.

The course, entitled "The Wonders of Menominee County," was announced by the Wolf River Basin Regional Planning Commission and Menominee Enterprises, Inc.

Persons attending all of the 16 classes will receive $100, the announcement said. Those attending 12 classes will receive $50.

Nature Study Group
The rewards, according to the announcement, "are sponsored by public-spirited friends of the Menominees through a Menominee nature studies group."

Dr. Jacob Shapiro, WSU-O ecologist, last October urged the development in the northern Wisconsin county. He is chairman of the nature trails and nature centers committee of the Wolf River commission. At that time, Dr. Shapiro said the first step would be formation

Appleton Man Suffers Minor Injuries Saturday

Walter C. Lemke, 65, 1512 S. Memorial Drive, reportedly suffered minor injuries when the car he was driving struck an auto driven by Wayne R. Schimmer, 22, route 4, Appleton, at the intersection of S. State and W. Fourth streets at about 11:45 a.m. Saturday.

Appleton police said the accident occurred as Lemke was headed south on State and Schimmer was driving west on Fourth. Both vehicles were spun around by the force of the impact, police reported.

1st in State To be Built Privately

BY ALICE HUCK

Post-Crescent Staff Writer

Outagamie County is opening its own group foster home for eight boys this year, and its unique implementation through private financing by the foster parents themselves, is establishing guidelines for future group homes in the State of Wisconsin.

John Vick, foster care supervisor for the Division of Children and Youth of the State Department of Public Welfare, said in an interview, "Our division is excited about Outagamie's plan, because the need is so great, and Outagamie is the first county in Wisconsin to come up with an agreement for complete private financing of a new facility for more than four boys."

Many of the guidelines revolve around the actual building of the home, which when finished, must meet facility standards of the state department. All previous group homes in Wisconsin only have been concerned with remodeling of existing structures.

Other guidelines concern the contract with the foster parents which must protect both the parents and the county.

First Use

Although the Outagamie County Department of Public Welfare is responsible for the home and will have "first use," it will be available to other agencies in the county if the capacity is not fully utilized by the department.

Public and private welfare agencies will be briefed on the group foster home at a Community Forum meeting at noon Feb. 13 at Alex's Manor House. At that meeting, the community will meet the foster parents, Mr. and Mrs. Donald Peeters, for the first time. Art Malin, United Community Services director, said that persons interested in the home, who are not on the Forum mailing list, should call the UCS office for reservations.

The group home will be built on a farm in the Town of Main where the Peeters now live. Boys placed there will attend school in the Clintonville district, where officials already have been informed of plans for the home.

Home Evolved

Seven foster children have been placed with the Peeters since July, 1964. When they decided, in the fall of 1965, to build a new farm home, they consulted the welfare department about future placements. From this the group home evolved.

Explaining the need, Alfred R. Eggert, director of the county welfare department, said, "Outagamie County has always taken care of its own boys, and there has been a need for a group home facility for a long time." He explained that the county has not committed its boys to the State Department of Public Welfare and its institutions, unless circumstances allowed no other placement. The county has preferred to use private, residential treatment homes, or has treated them locally in individual foster homes or in their own homes.

Eggert pointed out that with the passage of Aid to Dependent Children in Institutions (ADC-I) these facilities are being flooded with applications. Only three counties, Outagamie, Winnebago and Waukesha previously made much use of private residential institutions. ADC-I state aid reimburses all counties for 50 per cent of the cost, and now placements are more difficult to make, because more counties are willing to budget half of a boys' care, than were willing to assume the full cost. Also, the state department is now charging all counties for boys committed to their care.

Cities Alliance Backs Tax Sharing Proposal

er openly opposed the proposed formula.

Meier also said, "I'm worried that we're going to get so many groups up there in Madison that the legislature won't listen to any of us."

"This group," Buslee stated, "should just help the League to give impetus to legislation."

Indication to Madison

"The alliance is just an indication to Madison that the cities have about had it," Buslee said.

Kannenberg answered, "We could do the League a lot more good if we were prepared on an issue."

One of the purposes of the Manitowoc meeting was to discuss a proposal to revise the state's revenue-sharing formula for sales, income and utility taxes with emphasis on greater relief on "high-tax areas," namely large cities.

The plan is being finalized by the City of Milwaukee and was outlined by fiscal controller Shepard Magidson. Other matters discussed included "piggy-back" sales tax, in-lieu-of-tax payments to cities by state institutions presently tax exempt and increased state aids for education.

All the issues were suggested as providing immediate tax relief to large cities.

Milwaukee Plan

The Milwaukee plan which will be offered in bill form to the legislature, admittedly would cut the tax share of some smaller communities but increase the state revenues of large cities, including those in the Fox River Valley.

Wauwatosa Mayor Ervin Meier

Task Force

A state task force presently is studying the critical revenue-sharing issue and supposedly will make known its findings next year.

Buslee said, however, "One of the reasons we're here is to change the mood of the legislature. We can't wait until January of 1968."

"We are concerned from the standpoint of cities alone as opposed to cities and villages," Buslee said. "If the legislature doesn't revise the formula then they should give us the annexation prerogative."

City Manager Angus Crawford, went one step further and said, "The cities should consider that we abolish town government completely. There should be only three levels of government," Crawford said, "county, city and state."

Officials Summarize

Summary remarks made by officials at the Manitowoc meeting were:

"What we need from our legislature is action. Our annexation laws are going to have to be relaxed in favor of the cities. Under our present system, Madison is actually helping to perpetuate these tax islands and this is just one of the reasons why the present formulas must be revised."

Appleton Mayor Buckley.

"The townships provide the tax islands and are of little or no value to growth of the state. I don't feel the urban areas should be hamstrung by the 'urban fringes'." Oshkosh City Manager Crawford.

"The only way the city can increase its tax base is by annexing property in the path of urban development. The legislature should give us a tool whereby we can improve our own tax structure..." City Manager Buslee, Fond du Lac.

Liveable Community

"Property tax is unjustly being used and other sources must be sought if we are to have a liveable community..." Mayor Donald A. Tilleman, Green Bay.

"This is a horse and buggy approach in the space age. We don't have close enough communication with our state legislature..." Mayor Rand, Manitowoc.

"Formulas that shared taxes and state aids are based on are outdated. The needs of the cities certainly are a lot greater than the needs of the townships..." Mayor Joseph R. Browne, Sheboygan.

Many promises must be overcome by the informal Alliance of Cities before it can realize a move toward property tax relief for large cities, the mayors concluded.

Internal Course

An internal course of action is needed, they decided, whether committee conducting public hearings, by a majority vote, to permit televising and broadcasting the proceedings.

Ratio High Between Drinking, Accidents into an accident are double that of a non-drinker.

As the traffic toll mounted toward record heights last year, an aroused public demanded with renewed vigor that something be done to stop the blood — and booze — from flowing on the state's highways.

Some felt more law enforcement was needed; others asked for heavier penalties for offenders.

Policemen are faced with a dilemma. They can't stop a motorist just because they see him leaving a tavern.

Many Refuse Test

"After midnight Saturday, I'd guess eight out of every 10 drivers on our city streets would register at least .10," one policeman said.

The officer must have evidence the motorist doesn't have the car under control. Then he is taken to the station where physical coordination tests are conducted. Then comes the breathalyzer test, which many drivers refuse.

Almost all charges are brought into court under city or county ordinances, which call for a maximum fine of $200. The state statute provides for a jail sentence but local officials prefer to keep the revenue at home.

Governor Warren P. Knowles feels that a uniform 21-year-old drinking law would help. He also supports an implied consent clause which would force suspected drunken drivers to submit to alcohol testing or face an automatic three-month jail sentence. A third point, which would go far toward curbing the drinking driver, the governor feels, is reducing the legal intoxication level from .15 to .10.

Are You Drunk?

Some police officers believe if the level was dropped to .10, convictions would increase by at least 50 per cent. They say that many motorists fail the physical coordination test, but they register less than .15 on the breathalyzer and thus aren't brought into court.

Are you drunk when your blood alcohol stands at .10? Dr. Herman Heise, a pioneer in blood testing from Milwaukee, says yes. Most physicians agree the turning point toward intoxication is around .10.

The only trouble is: few people know when they've reached the .10 mark.

According to research in the matter, a 100-pound woman needs only three drinks while an 180-pound man can take five to reach the danger level. These drinks contain one ounce of 100 proof alcohol. (see chart)

Neenah Driver Hurt After Losing Control Of Car on U. S. 41

OSHKOSH — Raymond A. Hoppe, 1059 Gillingham Road, Neenah, was seriously injured when his car hit a bridge on U.S. 41 in the town of Neenah Saturday morning.

Hoppe was taken to Theda Clark Memorial Hospital by ambulance.

State police said Hoppe was driving south on U.S. 41 when his car went onto the right shoulder and hit a guard rail. The car then veered across the road, crossing the median strip, and struck a bridge abutment on the east side of the road over County Trunk S, where it came to rest, police said.

He lays the blame on a society "which condones drunkenness and excessive drinking." Father Maroli said people will have to face up to the moral aspects of drinking and driving.

Nine-Year-Old Is Trapped In Clothes Chute 30 Minutes

Two Appleton Fire Department rescue units worked approximately 30 minutes Saturday afternoon to free a 9-year-old girl stuck in a clothes chute.

Barbara Wolfram, 718 E. Pershing St., was freed from a clothes chute in the home of a neighbor after the girl and her playmates attempted to slide from the home's first floor to the basement.

Rescue workers were forced to remove wall plaster and cut the chute before the girl was freed. They were called at about 2:30 p.m. by Mrs. Frank Winkel, 700 E. Pershing St., after earlier attempts at rescue proved futile.

The chute's opening was 5 1/2 x 12 inches, firemen said. Barbara managed to squeeze her legs and hips through the opening.

Alderman Will Find Development Plan Results in Questions

City of Menasha Renewal Is More Than 'Boundary-Setting'

BY CLIFF MILLER
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

MENASHA — When aldermen and members of the Menasha Redevelopment Authority met at Monday night's council committee of the whole session to discuss boundaries for redevelopment and renewal, they will face a complex set of questions that, if not postponed until further study, are sure at least to result in extended deliberation.

The basic decisions whether the council should design a set of areas to be the focus for future action, and if so where, can be made only after underlying questions have been weighed. Complicating the coming actions is the fact that some questions bearing on the decisions either cannot be answered or can only be given partial answers at this time.

Cost Discussion

Although spending is not directly a question, cost will probably enter the discussion. The reliability of federal aid programs is also a likely topic, particularly since the string of frustrations in attempting to win federal help to finance the planning still casts a dark question mark across the project.

Victor Gruen Associates, in a set of preliminary recommendations recently set before the MRA and council at the completion of the first two of five planning phases, has urged that the council draw boundaries around a portion of the downtown area of the city where redevelopment and renewal are recommended, then giving the go-ahead to apply for federal funds to prepare data necessary for future urban renewal efforts there.

The planning firm has also recommended that, while continuing actively to seek federal planning aid, the MRA should look for local donors, particularly among industry, to pay for the remaining three phases of planning. Jerry Pollak, Gruen planner, and MRA representatives two weeks ago discussed the possibility of hiring the firm to complete work on a "cost-plus" basis with fees to be paid as the work is done. This would permit completion in perhaps a year, Pollak said.

Contract Question

The council would have to approve signing a contract hiring the planner for more work, however, and it is believed possible that some councilmen would question hiring the planner without solid assurance he can be paid without further cost to the city. Already, the council granted $5,000 to the MRA so the first stages of planning could begin.

There is $5,500 in the MRA treasury, and Gruen has been paid $8,000 for the preliminary studies. That leaves $18,500 still to be raised, based on a total project cost of $32,000 estimated by Pollak.

If the council decides to designate the urban renewal area and try for federal aid, it also in effect will be moving toward a possible future commitment to spend local funds, since federal aid for renewal is applied on a sharing basis, generally two-thirds coming from the federal treasury and the rest from either private investors or local government.

Discusses Meeting

City Atty. Richard Steffens said Saturday he had discussed the coming meeting with officials involved late last week and had raised the question of cost. He also expressed doubt about depending too heavily on federal funds. As far as local government spending is concerned, he pointed out the city has a margin of roughly $1.3 to $1.4 million in valuation against which it can issue bonds for municipal projects.

Steffens also pointed out that there is a distinction between urban renewal and redevelopment, which could result in a dual set of decisions when the council decides to act.

When a part of a city is turned over to a redevelopment authority by the governing body of the city, it gives the redevelopment authority broad powers for making changes in the area, Steffens explained. As recommended by Gruen, the area where redevelopment is proposed would be concentrated would not necessarily have to be the same area assigned to the MRA, Steffens suggested. The city would apply for urban renewal assistance without involving the MRA.

Separate for Renewal

Instead, the territory outlined by Gruen could be designated separately for renewal, while the MRA could be assigned a smaller area or areas to attempt to redevelop. Steffens suggested, with the possibility of enlarging the space by later council action.

Steffens said he believes the outcome of the Monday night meeting might be two resolutions. The area recommended by Gruen for designation as the renewal district would be set aside in one action, which would probably have to be delayed until official description of the area can be prepared. The area runs generally from Center Street on Water Street to Racine Street, west on Second Street to a point west of Milwaukee Street, then back to Center along lines parallel to Milwaukee and Main streets.

The second resolution, said Steffens, might be to turn over smaller specific areas to the MRA. At the meetings with Pollak two weeks ago, the somewhat similar possibility of setting aside land adjoining the Gruen renewal area was suggested, with the idea that private developers might be interested in establishing a commercial enterprise there if land could be made available.

The possibility of some delay is apparent before either resolution could be agreed upon, drawn up and adopted.

George Kubisiak, President of Mo-Ski-tow Hill, Inc., operators of View Ridge Hill near New London, straightens out Barry Hammerberg's "magic carpet" which was used to turn an ice coated hill

Works on Hill at New London

Weird Contraption Converts Ice Glaze to Prime Snow for Skiing

NEW LONDON — Barry Hammerberg took a page from the "Arabian Nights" recently when he devised a "magic carpet" to turn an icy ski slope into a fun-filled slope.

Hammerberg's "carpet" was less magical than it was ingenious, but whatever its qualities, they worked. View Ridge ski hill was in operation last weekend while other hills, coated with an ice glaze, were forced to close down.

The inventor is production manager at Glass Fab, Inc., and a ski enthusiast. He serves as a member of the Mo-Ski-Tow Hill, Inc. board and in recent years has played a major role in grooming the hills for the ski season.

Conditions were excellent until a rain about 10 days ago iced the hills and made them dangerous.

Ice Transformed

Two nights were required for Hammerberg to "weave" the device using a farm drag, chain, angle iron, steel teeth and metal rods. By Saturday the six-foot wide and 12-foot long contraption had transformed the ice coating on the hill into a granular snow which produces excellent skiing.

Hammerberg admits the machine wasn't entirely his idea, but was a scaled down model of a commercially designed product developed in the East.

"I got the idea from a company that produces the so-called magic carpets," Hammerberg said. The commercial carpets groom a 30 foot wide swath on a ski hill, while his scaled down model will only form a six foot wide trail.

Reason for the major size reduction was that the ski hill's snowmobile would be unable to pull the larger sized carpet.

The angle iron, tool steel teeth and chain break up the ice or packed snow and the rods crush it into granular snow, Hammerberg explained.

Hammerberg said the carpet allowed the hill to run last into prime skiing condition last week. The carpet is a conglomeration of farm drag, tool steel teeth, chains, angle iron and steel rods. (Post-Crescent Photo)

Enrollments Don't Justify Fund Requests

Senator Leonard Says Campuses May Not Open on Schedule

RACINE (AP) — State Sen. Jerris Leonard says the legislature would like to see proposed University of Wisconsin divisions at Green Bay and Kenosha County open on schedule, but that estimated enrollments don't justify the UW funds requests.

The Bayside Republican, chairman of the University Affairs Subcommittee of the State Building Commission, addressed a group of 60 civic leaders Saturday in defense of his committee's reduction of construction money requests.

"Every step is being taken" to help the two campuses open by 1969, Leonard said. But the estimated initial enrollment of 221 students at the two-year Parkside campus in Kenosha County is not enough to enforce the university's budget demands, he said.

The commission had been asked for $22.7 million. Leonard's group reduced the request to $5.5 million for utilities and $8.9 million for construction.

Leonard objected to the idea of a pair of two-year campuses. He suggested planning a four-year campus at each site even if openings were delayed a year. A delay, he said, would provide time to have more funds available.

The gathering adopted a motion to create a 12-member committee including local legislators to help speed development of the Parkside unit.

Several speakers criticized the enrollment estimates saying a poll of the 10,000 high school students in Racine and Kenosha counties, and of the area's students at colleges elsewhere, might show a greater number of students would like to attend the Parkside campus.

Hammerberg jokingly said, "I will test it myself — so it should be pretty safe. If it wasn't safe, I would have someone else test it."

Skiing at View Ridge is expected to be excellent this weekend, with two snow falls last week, and the snow Wednesday to go. "These areas either went unpacked or required a good final dressing."

Five Injured in County Crashes

Stopping in Traffic, Loss of Control Listed as Causes

Five persons were injured in two highway accidents in Outagamie County about mid-day Saturday.

A 13-year-old Hortonville girl reportedly suffered a whiplash and an Appleton man and woman suffered a cut nose and bump on the head respectively in an accident on County Trunk S at Laird Road in the Town of Ellington at approximately 2 p.m. Cathy Wolf, route 1, Hortonville, was a passenger in a car driven by Merlin Wolf, 45. She reportedly suffered the whiplash when the Wolf car was struck from behind by an auto driven by Paul B. Quimby, 44, 1019 W. Frances St., Appleton. Quimby suffered a cut on his nose and a passenger in his car, Velda Quimby, received a bump on the head, Outagamie County Traffic police said.

Both cars were headed west on S and Wolf was stopped in a line of traffic attempting to turn left when the mishap occurred.

In the other county accident, Dorothy B. Langlotz, 2029 N. Bennett St., Appleton, suffered cuts on her legs and a passenger in the car she was driving, Arthur Zierer, 73, same address, suffered a bruised right hand and shoulder injuries.

They were hurt, police said, when the car, which was southbound on State 47, went out of control and turned on its side in a ditch one-fifth mile south of County Trunk S at 10:25 a.m.

National Council Seeks Answers

Winter 'Safety Items' Tested

BY JOHN SAWALL
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

STEVENS POINT — Winter and its parasite, icy roads, will remain for many weeks in this part of the country but the National Safety Council hopes to find ways of lessening driving hazards.

Officials of the council and other interested persons, including tire manufacturers and at least one truck-driver's union, are seeking to answer perennial questions prompted by winter snow and ice.

They hope to learn exactly which tires are the most effective and whether an anti-jackknife device for trucks is as good as its manufacturer says it is.

The two-week testing program, which was scheduled to start last Monday, was delayed for three days because of the storm in Chicago where some of the equipment was snowbound. Here at the test site difficulties were encountered in building the needed ice courses. This will be the third year that the National Safety Council has been conducting some of their winter driving tests in Stevens Point.

Instructors Attend

In addition to testing tires and equipment, this year a winter driving course was held for 25 to 30 university instructors from throughout the nation. The course was open only to instructors who teach other driving instructors. The instructors were not only able to become more familiar with how to avoid skidding on ice and how to recover from skids but also took part in a demonstration on the gripping powers of various types of snow and studded tires.

The tests are being conducted on three courses which have been built by the City of Stevens Point. The main test area is a sheet of ice 1,000 feet long and 200 feet wide. In addition to this course there is a 50-foot circular ice track and a 600-foot long ice strip which is used for the sand and salt tests.

Testing of an anti-jackknifing device for semi-trailer trucks started Friday. The tests are being watched by the National Safety Council and officials of the truck drivers Teamsters Union. A demand for an anti-jackknife device on semi-trucks is one of the safety features being sought in a new Teamsters Union contract which is now being negotiated, an official at the test site said.

Made in England

The device being tested is manufactured in Great Britain where it has been in use for the past four years. It was introduced to the United States trucking industry early in 1966. A representative of the firm which distributes the device in this country said the units already have been installed on several hundred trucks. Cost of the unit is approximately $600 and it is attached to the trailer portion of a tractor-trailer rig.

The principal of the anti-jackknife applies when the truck driver uses air brakes. The wheels of the truck stop and a piston comes down on top of a disc brake which applies pressure to the fifth wheel of the truck. The fifth wheel is the point where the tractor and the trailer are attached and is the pivot point. Pressure on the fifth wheel prevents the tractor portion of the truck from jackknifing.

Gaining speed on a circular area north of the main ice course the truck made approaches at several speeds. The driver applied both the trailer brakes and tractor brakes in some of the runs and in other runs only the trailer brakes. In none of the tests Friday, did the unit jackknife when the brakes were applied on slick ice.

Salt vs. Sand

Another test new this year will be of salt and sand. E. A. Whitehurst, test director, said a special truck equipped with a dynamometer will check the effects of salt on ice and sand.

While the tests are being made a film crew is producing a movie for the National Safety Council. The movie will show the results of the testing and also illustrate corrective measures needed while skidding on ice. A similar movie was made four years ago but became outdated since studded tires have been placed on the market as well as other equipment such as the anti-jackknifing device.

Commenting about the studded tires, Whitehurst, who is the director of the Tennessee Highway Department research program, said he thinks that tire manufacturers have placed too much emphasis on the new studded tires. "Companies claim that the studded tires are 100 per cent more effective than regular tires but on ice regular tires are almost useless so it does not take much to have a tire that is 100 per cent better," Whitehurst said.

"In snow, the snow tire gives just as much traction as the studded tire, but on ice the studded tire is superior to the snow tire," he said.

Although the start of the testing was delayed, the tests are still scheduled for completion by next Friday, Whitehurst said. Because of the delay the testers will work longer each day to get the scheduled amount of tests compiled.

The test site is located at the Stevens Point Airport and is open to the public.

Rehearsals Start For KHS Play, 'The Crucible'

KAUKAUNA — Rehearsals are underway for the Kaukauna High School all-school play to be presented March 9, 10 and 11 in the student commons.

"The Crucible," title of the play, will be directed by Joseph McCarty, a senior at the school while Thomas Shaffer is faculty supervisor. As in previous years, the play will be presented "in the round." A limited number of seats will be available.

Reservations will be accepted late this month when ticket sales get underway. Cast members include Lois Schmidt, Francis Hilgenberg, Helen Renn, James Van Dyke, Patrick Brauer, David Bruhl, Donna Greiner, Doris Heller, Cheri Lindell, Joseph McCarty, James Pendergast, Rebecca Schmidt, Kristine Schoenfeld, Virginia Siebers, Allan Skromme, Wayne Skromme, Susan Tomazevic, Thomas Wiesler and Lynn Wolf.

The vehicle's trailer is equipped with a special anti-jackknife device. Reports said the unit did not jackknife once during the tests. A council official, below, observes the test runs. He is flanked by tires used during the two-week program. The council hopes to determine the comparative effectiveness of regular, snow and studded tires as well as sand and salt used to melt ice. Thunder, Lightning Marked January's Unusual Weather

January weather was high-lighted by a severe storm on Jan. 24. Thunder and lightning, an inch of rain and winds up to 44 miles per hour were recorded during this storm. Power and communication interruptions were numerous throughout the area. The 1.00 inches of precipitation recorded on Jan. 24 is the greatest daily amount ever recorded in January.

Outagamie County's Department of Public Welfare is opening the first group foster home in the state which will be privately financed by foster parents. As such it will establish guidelines for future group homes which are licensed by the Division of Children and Youth. State Department of Public Welfare. The home will be built on the property of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Peeters, foster home parents, and was designed by Kurt Biggars Associates, Appleton, who provided this sketch.

with the Peeters, has been Lavern Leach, social worker, who will be group home coordinator.

Although the Peeters are sole owners of the facility they are building, licensing is done by the state. Close cooperation with the department has enabled the Peeters to get their license, subject to building construction as agreed upon.

Private Rooms

As plans are now, each boy will have his own room. A recreation lounge and multiple bath facility will be shared, and an interviewing office will be used by the boys' caseworkers when they visit the home.

The house is built into a knoll with main entrance at the front. The boys normally will come in through the back, where they will shed boots and outer clothing in a "mud room" from which they can go to a double-shower wash room, if necessary. Quarters for the Peeters will be separate, and right above the boys.

As operators and parents, the Peeters will have specific responsibilities in addition to providing the physical setting. They must furnish such physical needs as adequate and nutritious diet, clothing replacements, handling personal allowances, a range for transportation to appropriate school, community, social recreation, shopping and health services.

They must employ additional domestic help and relief house parents required for the efficient functioning of the home and continuing supervision of group. The boys will direct and supervise the boys' living activities consistent with the welfare department's or other agency's wish to get individual and over-all treatment plans and goals.

The welfare department, which has all the accompanying responsibilities of foster boy placement also is responsible for furnishings directly related to operation of the home.

These will include furniture, bedding and curtains or drapes for each of the eight bedrooms, including a television set and record player for the group home lounge, a dining table, chairs and table settings for three chairs and four-drawer cabinet for the group home office and interview room; a table, chairs and table settings for three chairs and four-drawer cabinet for the group home office and interview room; a table, chairs and table settings for three chairs and four-drawer cabinet for the group home office and interview room.

We have had inquiries as to how the community can help. It is in this area that it may be of help. We would be delighted to accept help, Eggert said.

A Flurry of Activity as Winter Carnival Ends

OSHKOSH — Sigma Tau Gamma Fraternity walked off with top honors and the coveted President's Cup Saturday night, the culmination of the week's activities for the eighth annual Wisconsin State University-Oshkosh Winter Carnival, sponsored by Reeve Memorial Union.

The cup goes to the organization accumulating the most points during the carnival events. Dr. Roger E. Guiles, WSU-O president, in whose honor the cup is named, presented the trophy to Wallace "Buz" Barlow of Sigma Tau Gamma.

Thirty campus organizations competed for the cup.

Thousands of persons, some from as far away as Green Bay and Milwaukee, came to Oshkosh to view the ice and snow sculpture which was judged at noon. Spectators were still gathered in front of the Union, where the ice work is displayed, late Saturday night. Entries were based on the carnival theme, "Recorded in Ice", with a theme relationship pertaining to a record album or song.

First place in ice sculpture went to Tau Kappa Epsilon for its entry, "Second Hand Rose." Sigma Tau Gamma's "King of the Road" took second, while "I Call Your Name," Clemons Hall won third place.

The Blue, White and Green entry of Sigma Epsilon, "Puff the Magic Dragon," took first in Snow Sculpture. Second place went to Fletcher Hall's "Lady Godiva." Tied for third in snow sculpture were Phi Sigma Epsilon with "I've got the World on a String" and Delta Sigma Phi's "Last Train to Clarksville."

St. Norbert Competition Set for Today

WEST DE PERE — Three professional musicians—each outstanding in his own field—will judge the St. Norbert College music department's annual performance competition to be held at 1 p.m. today in the Hall of Fine Arts.

Arthur Cohrs will judge the piano division. An instructor of piano and theory at the University of Wisconsin-Green Bay since last fall, he has performed at a number of recitals in this area. After completing his undergraduate work at the University of Wisconsin, Cohrs received his master's degree from Eastman School of Music and is presently a doctoral candidate at Northwestern University. He taught last year at Concordia Teacher's College, River Forest, Illinois.

The instrumental division will be evaluated by Clare Hounsell, band director of East De Pere High School. He is also assistant conductor of the Green Bay Symphony and a member of the Green Bay Packer Band and also plays and arranges for the Gail Shepherdson Band. Hounsell was the founder and first conductor of the North Woods Symphony, Iron River, Michigan, and composed "A Lumberjack Rhapsody" which was played recently on the St. Norbert Band concert program.

Richard Vander Bloemen, who will judge the voice division, is choral director at Luxemburg High School. After receiving a bachelor of music degree from Lawrence University, he continued private study in Italy. Vander Bloemen, a tenor, has given numerous recitals in the Green Bay area and has performed with the Lawrence University Symphony. His home is in Manitowish.

Survey to Study Flooding Along Rivers to Cost $15,000

WASHINGTON — Surveys to cost $15,000 of possible flood conditions along the Fox and Wolf rivers have been requested in President Johnson's budget for the fiscal year 1968, commencing in July.

These funds represent the continuation of previous surveys of the area, which started in the fiscal year 1962, according to a spokesman at the U.S. Office of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors here, who said the first survey cost an estimated $30,000.

The surveys include investigation of any conditions which might cause floods at New London, Shiocton, Princeton and the shore of Lake Winnebago, according to the U.S. Engineers.

Surveys must be conducted in district engineers before any funds for flood control may be allocated.

The federal project was authorized in 1946 but not funded until fiscal 1962.

This Scene of Moscow in the movie "Dr. Zhivago" is authentic in every detail, but it never was in Russia. Unable to film the banned Nobel Prize-winning novel by Boris Pasternak in the Soviet Union, this and several other Moscow streets were recreated on a 10-acre site on the outskirts of Madrid, Spain. The complex of streets was built by 780 construction workers for the movie about Russia in the early 20th century. "Dr. Zhivago" is plying at the Viking Theater for an extended run with matinees Wednesdays and Saturdays and three shows scheduled for Sundays.

Nothing but Praise for Movie 'Doctor Zhivago'

Faithful to Author Pasternak's Novel
Work Shows Top Film Craftsmanship

BY JAMES AUER
Post-Crescent Sunday Editor

In the parlance of the motion picture industry, David Lean's film of "Doctor Zhivago," which opened Wednesday night at the Viking Theater for an extended run, is a director's picture.

It is also, judging from the hushed and sympathetic reaction of the opening night crowd, an audience picture.

If it has not, to date, been a critic's picture (some of the notices have been, to put it mildly, lukewarm), it must be observed that no film maker, no matter how gifted, can be expected constantly to out-do himself — particularly when, as in the case of Lean, his past efforts have been of the caliber of "Lawrence of Arabia," "Great Expectations" and "The Bridge on the River Kwai."

Suffice it to say that all of David Lean's long-recognized taste and craftsmanship, his keen visual sense and his capacity for extracting the ultimate in dramatic advantage out of cutting transitions and the creative use of sound are in evidence in "Doctor Zhivago."

Compelling Picture

Working in conjunction with designer John Box, script writer Robert Bolt and cinematographer Freddie Young, this master of framing and montage has produced a 3½-hour picture with the pace and tautness of a 90-minute thriller. "Zhivago" is continuously compelling with a pictorial richness and subtlety of characterization seldom combined in large-scale productions.

In bringing to the screen Boris Pasternak's complex tale of a Russian poet-physician, guilty of the crime of maintaining an individualistic style of life during the intensified military and political struggles of the Bolshevik revolution, Lean and his producer, Carlo Ponti, have stunningly re-created the panorama of a great nation in turmoil.

The gaiety and corruption of upper class life under the Czar in peacetime and the ever-present, unprovoked attack by dependable Alec Guinness as dragons upon a band of Zhivago's brother provides the peacefully protesting marcher's narration that binds the film. The impoverishment and together Rita Tushingham is ruin of the professional classes seen briefly as Zhivago's daughter journey by rail across half a terror-ridden continent from The film will open at the Moscow to the Urals — all these Time Theater, Oshkosh, Feb. 8.

Psychiatrist Interprets Teen-Age Emotions to Area Foster Parents

The teen-ager is in a special process of growth, trying to gain emotional and behavioral self control, area foster parents were told Wednesday.

Speaking on tasks of the adolescent at the monthly meeting of foster parents, Dr. Denton P. Engstrom, Appleton psychiatrist and medical director of the Community Guidance Center of Outagamie County Inc., said, "This is the time of turmoil because the teen is trying to gain independence while still being dependent, social acceptance of and by both sexes, and self identity."

Find Self

He elaborated on identity for adolescents as the task of trying to find themselves and realizing they are individuals with some control over the course of their lives.

This identity, the psychiatrist said, includes thoughts about the future in regard to schooling, employment or military service.

"Often these thoughts are unspoken, and some teens will not discuss plans even with their closest friends. Yet, they will be making decisions about these important steps, either actively or by default," he added.

Dr. Engstrom also stressed the normal process of physical, chemical psychological and emotional changes as adolescents mature at highly individual rates.

Identity Grows

From early adolescence, through middle and late adolescence the teen experiences feelings of inadequacy, awkwardness and separation of sexes. As they awaken to their own sexual identities they grow in self confidence and independence, he said.

Rebellion, too, is normal and serves a need to assert themselves and to conform to their age group, the doctor added.

"This in part, accounts for the typical mark of the teen to dress, talk, dance and behave differently from adults as possible."

He also pointed out that even though the teen rebels against adults and authority, he needs and wants this outside control.

Knowles Seeks Fundamental Change In Operations of Property Tax System

BY JOHN WYNGAARD
Post-Crescent Madison Bureau

MADISON — The property tax system, giant among the public revenue sources of the state since the pioneers dug into their purses for the first public taxes paid in the infant state more than a century and a quarter ago, may be headed for significant revision.

A fundamental change in the operations of the property tax maintains that such assurance is not now being provided.

Part-Time Officials

"We now have over 1,800 assessors in Wisconsin," Gov. Knowles told a senate committee which took up the assessment bill for first consideration last week. "Many of them are elected part-time officials. With the increasing local reliance on the property tax, taxpayers deserve a better system of property tax administration."

Knowles noted that Wisconsin is one of only nine remaining states which provide for elected assessors at the municipal level of government.

While the exclusion of the larger districts of the state will serve to reduce the resistance to the measure—on the assumption that most of the cities already have adequate assessment programs—it is already clear that local officialdom of the affected territory of the state will protest what it sees as another effort by the state to impugn he competence and integrity of local government in Wisconsin.

Some angry objection to the plan for state control of assessment procedures has already been recorded. The probable reply of the sponsors of the measure is that the state already has supervisory control over local assessments under present law, and that the measure is merely intended to make the protection implied in that power more reliable and workable.

The statement of purposes in the new measure pointedly declares that "the assessment process shall be a local government function, with supervision by the state."

Training, Ability

The bill preface also asserts that "all property should be assessed by assessors chosen on the basis of training and ability, and that assessment districts should be large enough to support an adequate staff."

Under the bill, the state department of taxation would determine when a county would come under the county assessor system, but full county coverage of assessments would be required with 10 years after the enactment of the new law.

After a county is designated for inclusion in the plan, the county government would appoint an assessor from a list of three names of qualified candidates as tested by the state bureau of personnel. The bureau would also designate a reasonable starting salary for the office, which would be accepted by the county as the minimum to be paid. Cost of the county assessment office would be levied against the local tax districts included in the county assessment district.

The full market value assessment system, the governor has said, is desirable "so that taxpayers throughout the state will be able to measure effectively their tax burden."

"By enacting this proposal, the legislature can show that the state of Wisconsin recognizes its responsibility to modernize governmental operations to meet changing conditions," he added. "It will also show the local property taxpayer that the state is aware of the importance of the local property tax and the need for equitable assessments."

End Confusion

Aside from other purposes and consequences, the single and uniform method of reporting assessments at full market value would eliminate some confusion and misunderstanding in the taxpayer's mind about the separate "assessed valuation" and "equalized valuation" data involved today in tax reporting and administration.

Under the present system the local assessor sets his own "assessed values", upon which the locally levied tax rate rests, and the distribution of the levy over the taxpayers of a local district is as far as the assessors' valuation calculations are accurate. The ratio of assessed value to full value varies widely, however, and thus under the present system the state computes what is known as "equalized value", and is used for the apportionment of county taxes, joint school district and other special district taxes, and the small state property tax, among the local taxing jurisdictions. Theoretically such "equalized values" are full or true values, but there is some doubt about the adequacy of the calculations. Revaluation is made in most counties only at intervals of five or six years.

That the state tax administration has some reservations about the capacity of its present machinery to produce full values accurately it shown by its statement that the real estate transfer tax will be required to make current sales information fully available and in a reliable way.

Freeman Asks Assistance In Farm Fight

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of Agriculture Orville L. Freeman has asked the help of farmers to convince Congress to continue present federal farm programs.

The cabinet officer made his appeal in a talk before 134 leaders of the North Dakota and Minnesota Farmers Union who came here this week to urge more government help for farmers.

"The Farm Bureau is working hard on Capitol Hill, trying to convince congressmen farm programs no longer are needed now food surpluses have disappeared," said Freeman. "Its argument is being taken in by a lot of people there."

He said retention of the programs is essential to prevent a new era of overproduction and price-depressing surpluses.

"The secretary needs all the help he can get," Freeman said. "The farmers union has been a staunch supporter of current farm measures and policies. But the American Farm Bureau Federation, the largest of the general farm organizations, long has advocated less government control over farming."

"We in agriculture can't exercise effective power any more,"

Dancing Good If You Plan On Drinking

MILWAUKEE (AP)—Dancing reduces the effects of alcoholic beverages, a tavern operator says.

William Bathke, a tavern proprietor testifying Thursday during a common council hearing concerning proposed reduction of space requirements for dancing, said dancing not only offsets the influence of alcohol, but tends to cut down on the amount of liquor a tavern patron consumes.

The council's License - Rules Committee is studying a labor union's request that the minimum amount of floor space required for dancing be reduced, and that the legal age for entertainers in taverns be reduced to 18 from 21.

Supporters of the reductions have argued that teenage bands are forced to seek employment in suburbs because of the ordinances requiring a minimum of 300 square feet before dancing is permitted.

Wyngaard

is one of the major proposals submitted to the new legislature by Gov. Warren P. Knowles, with the backing of the state department of taxation.

A county assessment system, in charge of professionally trained and appointed assessors, would replace the majority of the assessors in the state under the plan advanced by the state administration.

It would apply, in stages over a decade, in all taxing districts except those with a population of 10,000 or more which could elect to be excluded and operate their own assessment offices.

Central Feature

Another central feature of the change would be a requirement for uniform assessment at full market value of all real and personal property.

Because accurate current sales information is thought to be required to assure such accurate and full value assessments, the bill provides for a real estate transfer tax at the rate of 50 cents for each $500 of value, which would become effective with the scheduled expiration of the Federal Documentary Stamp Act.

The state-wide property tax system now has a value base of nearly $25 billions. Although there have been heavy additions to the state taxation schedule, in income and sales levies, as a means of holding down the rate of increase of property tax levies, the tax remains by a huge margin the single most productive source of governmental revenue in the state-local fiscal structure.

It now yields about $600 millions a year.

James R. Morgan, the state tax commissioner, in an argument prepared for the legislature asserts that the enormous importance of the tax in the financing of public services, and the weight of that burden upon the people of Wisconsin, requires that the legislature give the best possible assurances that it is being fairly and accurately administered. With the backing of Gov. Knowles, he

GOOD DRIVING IS AN ART

The art of driving is in reality an application of five fundamental concepts:

1. Driving is a privilege — not a right.
2. Power is useful only where it is controlled
3. Self-enforcement is the basis of all law enforcement.
4. Good driving is defensive driving.
5. Accidents and violations are evidence of inefficiency and incompetence.

A temporary "running behind" in the issuance of Wisconsin driver licenses is causing many inquiries as to the delay and, also, concern to those people whose present license has expired.

Delays were occasioned by complications arising when the department began converting to an entirely new way of handling driver license applications — from card punching to optical scanning.

So hold on, your license will be along any day now. Presently they are running three to four weeks in processing.

Question: What about these cars with improper mufflers?

Answer: Motor vehicles must be equipped with a muffler in all those youths who can now goad working order. Excessive purchase beer.

The state law now sets an 18-year-old minimum for drinking smoke are prohibited Muffler year-old minimum for drinking cutouts, and devices to ignite beer, but gives localities the option of raising the minimum to 21.

Florida's Dapper New Governor, Claude Roy Kirk Jr., stands aboard sailboat at Key Largo, Fla. With him is Brika Mattfeld, former model he intends to marry. Kirk, a boy wonder of Florida business, has become a glamor boy of Florida politics. (AP Wirephoto)

First Florida GOP Leader in Century Working Swinger

Claude Roy Kirk Jr. Wants to Turn Image to Public Servant

By KELLY SMITH
TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Florida's new governor is the kind of man who, when talking to a girl named Jones and asked what he likes, replies, "Girls named Jones."

Or when at a cocktail party he meets a pretty girl, puts his arm around her and quips to her escort, "How'd a man like you get a beautiful woman like this?"

Claude Roy Kirk Jr. is as smooth as the blend of Scotch he drinks. He is also flamboyant, serious, cocksure, careful.

He is Florida's first Republican governor in a century — winning the biggest upset among the 14 new Republican governors elected in November.

"You'll know him," a capitol secretary said. "He swaggers when he walks and he swaggers when he talks."

Kirk has a showman's flair for the spectacular. Some liken him to the state's pink-plumed flamingo, a gregarious bird with scarlet wings and a theatrical flair.

He held his first news conference in white tie and tails. He called an unexpected session of the legislature 30 minutes after he took the oath of office. He squared a beautiful divorcee to his inaugural ball, introduced her as "Madame X," then disappeared with her for three days to a fancy yacht club.

The resulting news hunt reached soap-opera proportions. Before the governor came out of hiding and said he was marrying his secret love, Erika Mattfeld. Legislators developed the attitude, "Everybody loves a lover, however."

Private Jet

He hired a detective agency, Wackenhut Corp. of Miami, to guard him. He flies in a private jet. He travels in a private limousine with an intercom and television, driven by a state-provided bodyguard.

"This is going to be one hell of an administration," said a state legislator. "It's got everything it takes to be a first rate move."

Legislators call him "Claude, Baby," and "Kissing Claude."

Kirk, 41, looks like a movie-land tough in dapper dress. A broad shouldered 6-foot-2, dieting at 200 pounds, he has a ruggedly handsome face and dark wavy hair. His clothes are neatly tailored, his manicure clean-cut, his vest buttoned smoothly, and his shoes shined to a sheen.

He once took judo, the Japanese art of manly defense. He likes to sail and hunt and men say he can swap cloakroom tales with the best of them.

Women think he's sexy. Men think he'll hold the line on taxes.

"A business partner of mine once said the only woman in my life is work," Kirk says.

Since he took office, he has put in many 12-hour days. He gets up before 6 a.m., eats a dietetic grapefruit and black coffee breakfast and arrives at his wood-paneled office in the state capitol by 7 o'clock.

"He works hard and plays hard," says an associate. "He demands devotion from his staff. He's brash, tough and now of New York City. They have four children, Sarah, 18, Kitty, 17, and twin sons, Frank and Will, 12.

High Alimony

They married in 1947, were divorced in 1950, remarried the following year, and were divorced again last March 30.

His wife said in the divorce petition that he "drinks to excess quite often" and "has indiscreet public associations with other women." She said he "spends most of his time out of town and often outside the country, ostensibly on business."

He was told to pay $30,000 a year alimony and child support. His salary as governor is $27,500.

Kirk was born in San Bernardino, Calif., lived his Boy Scout years in Chicago, Oak Park, and River Forest, Ill., then moved to Birmingham and Montgomery, Ala.

He enlisted in the Marines at age 17, and by the time of his discharge three years later was a second lieutenant. He was recalled as a first lieutenant into the Korean War. In between, he attended the University of Alabama Law School.

In 1952, after Korea, he had $408 and no job. Within five years he parlayed that cash, some family savings and borrowed money into a booming insurance and investment business.

He became a boy wonder of the Florida business world. He founded a firm which became American Heritage Life Insurance Co., then went into partnership with Hayden Stone & Co., Wall Street investment firm. He later formed Kirk Investment Co.

"Kirk had a way with people," said an associate. "He listened to other people, but made his own decisions. He made you mad, but you liked him. Women adored him."

When he filed for governor, it was women who leaped aboard his bandwagon. They giggled. They swooned. Instead of hurting him, his divorce only seemed to add glamor.

In crowds, Kirk approached the women first. He clasped both hands of a woman voter when saying hello, winked and sweet-talked her in his low, rolling voice. He was magnetic.

"Fortunately," Kirk admits, "I was able to relate pretty good to the silk stockings."

GM 1966 Profits Fall $333 Million Below Record Mark in '65

Despite Drop, Largest Maker of Cars Winds Up Second Best Year

By CHARLES C. CAIN
AP Business News Writer
DETROIT (AP) — General Motors, the world's largest corporation, saw its 1966 profits fall $333 million below the record it set in 1965.

The decline stemmed largely from a drop of almost $500 million in sales, but the firm still wound up with its second-best year.

These were the key points in the preliminary financial statement of the giant automaking firm, which in 1965 became the first corporation with more than $2 billion in profits in a single year.

The 1966 figures were not quite that rich as GM earned $1.793 billion, down from the record $2.126 billion earned in 1965.

Abnormal Hike
GM President James M. Roche said his firm's 1966 figures were swelled abnormally because of a heavy carryover of car buyers who could not get new vehicles in late 1964 because of a GM strike.

The preliminary 1966 report released Tuesday showed sales totalled $20.2 billion, off nearly a half-billion dollars from 1965. GM's 1966 showing was aided by a fourth-quarter which made up in part for a sharp dip in the third quarter.

The world's biggest automaker did not announce specified figures for the final quarter, but subtraction of previously announced nine-month figures from those for the full year showed almost no decline in sales and only a small drop in profit.

Final Quarter
Indicated fourth-quarter profits were $553 million or $1.93 per share compared with $587 million or $2.05 in the final quarter of 1965.

Fourth-quarter sales came to $5.7 billion as against $5.8 billion in the final three months of 1965.

Worldwide sales of GM cars and trucks came to 6,617,000 last year, about eight per cent below 1965. GM's U.S. car sales last year were 5,195,000 compared with 5,696,000 in 1965.

GM had a record-breaking 745,000 people on its worldwide payrolls last year and paid them $5.6 billion. This compared with 734,600 workers and a $5.4 billion payroll in 1965.

Stockholders came in for a healthy share too as total dividends paid them in 1966 amounted to $1.298 billion or $4.55 per share, compared to $5.25 per share in 1965.

Parties Square Off Surcharge Debate Hits New Heights in Senate

By JACK LEFLER
AP Business News Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The debate over President Johnson's proposal of a six per cent surcharge on corporate and individual income taxes reached new heights during the week.

Democrats and Republicans squared off on opposite sides.

The question: Would such a tax boost be a help or a hindrance in warding off recession and inflation?

Republican members of the Senate-House Economic Committee contended that Johnson's "fancy fiscal and budgetary footwork" may bring on a recession and inflation simultaneously this year.

Not Convincing

Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., said: "The (economic) report fails to present a convincing case at this time for the tax surcharge called for by the President."

Gardner Ackley, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, defended the proposal, saying: "The economy is in a basically sound and healthy condition, and we expect it to stay that way through 1967. We see an advance of gross national product — total of all goods and services — this year by about $47 billion to the neighborhood of $787 billion."

"The year should produce continued growth in total output and a better balance among residential construction, business fixed investment and inventory investment."

Support LBJ Request

William McChesney Martin, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, said he fully supports Johnson's request for a tax increase, but he gave no indication whether the board would continue easing its credit policy.

"As is so often the case, uncertainties attend the economic future," Martin said. "And in these circumstances, given the budget projections just released, the President's request for a tax increase is a prudent proposal and has my full support."

Some key congressmen predicted that any income tax bill passed by Congress would place more of the burden on corporations, and less on individuals, than the plan recommended by Johnson.

They say it would be politically unacceptable to increase the individual rate as much as the corporate rate as proposed by Johnson.

Congressional sources also say that a tax increase, if enacted, is likely to be postponed beyond July 1, the target date aimed at by the President.

$3.4 Million Construction At Wisconsin Rapids Plant

WISCONSIN RAPIDS, — A 3.4 million construction and improvement program at the Wisconsin Rapids Division of Consolidated Papers, Inc. was announced by L. W. Murtfeldt, vice president-operations.

The program will include the rebuilding of the company's No. 14 enamel paper machine and a new off-machine blade coater will be constructed, Murtfeldt said. Work is expected to start this summer and will be completed early in 1968.

An order has been placed for a heavy-duty off-machine blade coater with Beloit Corp., Murtfeldt said, which will have two inverted blades. The mechanically driven unit will apply coatings to enamel printing papers for merchants at speeds up to 3,000 feet per minute.

The 144 inch wide blade coater will handle the production of No. 14 paper machine plus the equivalent of half another machine giving the company the potential to blade coat all paper produced at the Wisconsin Rapids Division.

The exact size and location of the coater building will be determined later, Murtfeldt said, but it will house two supercalenders and two rewinders now in use which will be moved to storage will be provided for in the new coater building. Consolidated operates an Appleton division.

Good Living in Traditional Two-Story

FIRST FLOOR PLAN

BY ANDY LANG

Explaining the continued popularity of the two-story colonial house is not easy. Its many variations are lacking in spectacular features. Perhaps this is its biggest asset. Nothing about it overwhelms you. Instead, there is a kind of balanced, familiar charm that exudes warmth and pleasant good cheer.

Traditional in style, the design

Design G-74 has a living room, dining room, kitchen-dinette, family room, laundry, lavatory, large foyer, rear patio, two-car garage and storage area on the first floor; four bedrooms and two baths on the second floor. The habitable area, which does not include the garage, storage section or patio, totals 1,799 square feet. Over-all dimensions are 63 feet 6 inches by 28 feet, which include the garage.

of this House of the Week has four bedrooms and 2½ baths within a total of 1,799 square feet of habitable area on two floors and within over-all dimensions of 63 feet 6 inches by 28 feet. It is capable of handling a large family without being spread out over a large plot of ground and an oversize house. Architect William G. Chirgottis intended Design G-74 to satisfy all family demands, a right from the start — and has succeeded in carrying out that purpose with a well-balanced layout.

The covered entry provides a welcome introduction to the house. An impressive foyer is the key to efficient circulation, distributing traffic effectively throughout the first and second floors. For the convenience of both guests and residents, a powder room has been provided off the entrance hall. The living room is the right of the foyer and features a large, projecting boxed bay window, yet still has a large amount of wall space for imaginative decorating.

An attractive staircase leads from the foyer to the four upstairs bedrooms, with a foyer-like hall eliminating any feeling of congestion on the second floor. There are seven closets upstairs to take care of clothes and storage needs. The master bedroom has a full bath with a stall shower. The other bathroom is split, with the lavatory in an outer section.

The kitchen and family room can be reached directly from the downstairs entrance foyer without crossing any other rooms. The kitchen provides sufficient eating accommodations for the entire family, with the left side of the room designated as the dinette. Windows over the sink and the dinette provide plenty of natural light besides affording a clear view of the backyard. Sliding glass doors in the family room take full advantage of the view, light and access to the rear patio and garden areas. Youngsters can be entertaining in the family room while the adults are enjoying the living room — without either group disturbing the other. Also in this area is the laundry room, with a washer, dryer, storage cabinet facilities and the rear service entry.

A full basement and the attached oversized two-car garage — with storage space for bicycles, garden tools and other equipment that do not have to be brought into the house — complete this solid two-story plan.

The artist's rendering shows how neatly architect Chirgottis has succeeded in making the garage appear to be part of the house. A common roof covers the family room and a portion of the garage. Identical windows enhance the arrangement. One structure appears to be a side house than at the side. But it is window belongs to the family porch or extra room. This type easily adaptable to the wishes of the owner. The other to the storage of architecture, effectively of a family that has sufficient portion of the garage. The camouflaging the garage from land to prefer a side entrance, remainder of the garage is set the front, is possible with most since it would not be necessary back four feet, with a sloping lot, where there usually is to destroy the illusory effect at roof that makes this part of the more space at the rear of the the front.

Keep Out Intruders With Pegboard Panels

So our builder-friend Andy, varying sized pieces or panels. Duval took it upon himself to on doors or walls, lets you hang equip both our front and back almost anything you can lift — doors with tight-closing alumi-it's out of the way, but at hand num louvers. This is the kind when you want it. Besides, where it takes strength, deter-these West Point straight rows mination and a strong prying of small holes make such a nice tool to force one of them apart, pattern that many decorators. However, before we left the even use pegboard to cover the island after a visit last summer, entire walls.

Now I chalk up another use — protection against prowlers. And yes, I sure am grateful. Here's the story.

St. Croix, in the Virgin Islands, is not much different in some ways from any other part of the U.S., but judging by some reports, it seems to have more than its share of burglarizing. Try Break-ins.

Since we built our beach house, we learned of several tries by kids to get in while we were off-island. But each time they were scared off. Finally someone did succeed in prying off a couple of redwood louvers on our back door, cutting

I took one more step. I bought panels of pegboard, and had them cut the same size as the panels of insect screens which fit behind the louvers. One of the last things I did was to unscrew the screen panels and fasten the pegboard in their place.

With this barrier of no-give pegboard backing up the louvers, I figured it would prove a final discourager, even if some character did succeed in prying one of those metal louvers apart.

Pegboard Held. Know what? That's exactly what happened. About a month later, Andy wrote and said that he found a louver had actually been pried back enough to permit a try for the door handle. But that's all. The pegboard made just like Gibraltar.

We've had no more trouble, and I'm sure to replace the door-screen panels with the pegboard any time we're not here.

As mentioned in the beginning, the prime purpose of pegboard is still storage, and not protection from house-breakers. If you haven't ever tried it, and you find an awkward accumulation of things on the garage floor, the kitchen sink counter top or your work-bench, give it a try.

Put up a panel on a garage wall and hang up all the garden tools, even the kids' bikes so you won't trip over them. Fasten pegboard on the back of the kitchen door for hanging surplus pans and other once-in-a-whiles. Fasten a panel of pegboard over your work-bench, and see how handy your tools will be when needed — but they won't get in the way when you're working.

A material of many wonderful uses.

Your Life Insurance

QUESTION: Do I understand there is a special kind of life insurance for the owner of a small business? I own a store, just getting on its feet, and I realize that right now, if I die, my family would be in real financial trouble. Would this special insurance cover my business? And would it cost a great deal?

ANSWER: You are talking about sole proprietorship life insurance — but actually, this is just life insurance in all its forms, written to take into account the special needs that relate to the business, as well as the family program. Not knowing too many details about your situation, a specific insurance plan cannot be proposed, but it is apparent that what you need is insurance to: (1) guarantee your family an adequate income to replace what you now produce; (2) cover immediate cash needs at and following your death; and (3) assure either the continuity of your business, or its sale, if the family is not to continue it. The latter, particularly, requires a close study of what you and your family need, are able to do and want done. Thus, you should get your life insurance agent (or get one, if you have none) and go over all the details with him. The cost, of course, would depend on what kind of insurance plan seemed necessary, but it would be proportionate to the business needs and a very important part of your business planning.

"Your Life Insurance" is presented each Sunday as a public service in cooperation with the Northwestern Wisconsin Chapter of the American Society of Chartered Life Underwriters. Address queries to "Life Insurance Editor" of the Sunday Post-Crescent.

Sturgeon Bay Artist Gerhard C. F. Miller, whose watercolor paintings will be displayed at the annual mid-winter exhibit of the Appleton Gallery of Arts, works at the easel in his studio three miles north of Sturgeon Bay. An imaginative realist, Miller finds much of his subject matter in Northern Wisconsin's Door County, and on the wide-ranging trips he and his wife take each year. (Post-Crescent Color Photo by James Auer)

A self-taught watercolorist whose forte is "imaginative realism," will be guest artist at the annual Mid-Winter Exhibit of the Appleton Gallery of Arts, to be held Feb. 12-16 in the Shell room of the Appleton YMCA.

He is Gerhard C. F. Miller, who with his wife, the former Ruth Morton, operates the Miller Gallery on Bay Shore Drive, three miles north of Sturgeon Bay.

Miller, who combines an enthusiasm for local history with an artist's eye for compositional and textural effects, has spent most of his creative life documenting, in watercolor and casein, the picturesque homes, docks, villages and fishing docks of his native county.

In addition, he has, each winter for the past 22 years, taken his brush and colors to a different locale. He has sketched and painted in most of the countries of Europe, as well as in Palestine, most of the West Indies, and Central America.

Examples of Miller's work, along with paintings and craft exhibits by some 60 Fox Cities artists and artisans, will be on view at the YMCA during the A.G.A. show. A "meet the artist" reception, honoring the Millers, will be held from 2 to 5 p.m. next Sunday, Feb. 12.

Regular hours for the Mid-Winter Exhibit are from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Sunday and Monday; 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Tuesday, and 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday.

Art works entered in the show will be juried by Robert Paterson, art supervisor for the Oshkosh Public Schools. Paterson, who earned his M.F.A. degree at the University of Wisconsin, chose watercolor as his area of major concentration while at the university.

Co-chairmen of the event are Mrs. Gladys Milner and Miss Phyllis Davidson. Committee chairmen are Mrs. Roy Schulte, publicity; Miss Norma Nussbaum, entry blanks; Fred Schmidt, invitations; Miss Beth Aalbers, reception; Mrs. Ted Schmit, registration of art works, and Mrs. Norman Burmeister, exhibit attendants.

Responsible for display are Dave Johnson, Mrs. Frans Vaurio, Ed Wendi, Frank Aldrich, Phil Sealy and Richard Roder.

"You can't beat Door County as a source of material as far as the painter is concerned," Gerhard Miller told The Post-Crescent during a recent visit to his home and studio. "Without a certain amount of realism in art, many of our links with the past would be lost."

Although Miller is highly critical of many contemporary American abstractionists, as well as the gimmickry of pop and op, he admires much of Scandinavian art.

"The Norwegians have the most wholesome approach to modern art," declared the Wisconsin-born painter. "They take motifs from Norse and Scandinavian mythology, and give them a contemporary interpretation."

A member of the American Watercolor Society, Audubon Artists and the Wisconsin Watercolor Society, Miller recently received the most important recognition of his career, when his painting, "The Nelson Homestead," was chosen for showing at New York's Metropolitan museum, as part of the American Watercolor Centennial Show.

Only 78 living artists were represented in the show, which commemorated 200 years of watercolor painting in America, and the centennial of the American Watercolor Society.

Miller's interest in art dates back to the age of 11, when he contracted polio and was unable to walk for many months.

"Granny taught me to crochet washcloths," he recalled. "I turned to painting as an escape. So really I'm an escape artist."

A university graduate in business administration, Miller for many years operated clothing stores at Sturgeon Bay and Ephraim. The businesses have, however, been taken over by his son, and Miller currently devotes all of his time to painting.

"I'm the partner that works hardest to get out of work," he smiles.

The artist's wife, a former member of the American Institute of Decorators, is currently working on a revision of her book, "The Home and Its Furnishings," originally published 14 years ago by McGraw-Hill, Inc.

The Millers were featured on network television two years ago when NBC News did a documentary on the Huntington Hartford artists' retreat at Pacific Palisades, Calif. At that time both had Huntington Hartford Fellowships — Miller for his painting, Mrs. Miller for her writing.

This winter the Millers plan to set off for the Amazon — but not before they have met members and guests of the A.G.A. at next Sunday's reception.

Little Emotional Impact

Kim's Violin Concert Had Warmth, Polished Skills

BY JACK RUDOLPH

GREEN BAY—Won-Mo Kim presented the type of recital at the University Center here Thursday evening that has become virtually his trademark. It glowed with the polish of fastidious technique and the warmth of his light, refined tone but avoided pyrotechnics and carried little emotional impact.

The program was one of real substance and variety and, in general, came off very smoothly and serenely.

Kim was not at ease in the opening Beethoven sonata. He approached it with caution, his playing was studied and there was little feeling of freedom. The slow movement dragged and his releases throughout lacked emphasis.

Thereafter, however, the young violinist was in full command. He took the Debussy with obvious confidence and snoring tone, the first movement being especially lovely.

The program:
Sonata No. 7 in C Minor, op. 30, No. 2 Beethoven
Sonata No. 3 in G Minor Debussy
Ballade from Sonata No. 3 for Unaccompanied Violin, op. 27, No. 3 Ysaye
Suite Italienne Stravinsky

The Ysaye piece, written by and for the particular talents of a renowned violinist, is one of those virtuoso pieces that can be played with fire and excitement or suavely, emphasizing technical dexterity without trying to overwhelm an audience. Kim preferred the latter approach and was more than equal to its complexities, although a bit more fire might have given it additional punch.

The closing Stravinsky work is an unusual set that doesn't sound much like Stravinsky except in the closing movement. It is, however, a delightful and melodic piece and Kim and Arthur Becknell handled it with skill. The slow movements were especially noteworthy.

If Kim's playing throughout seemed somewhat restrained there were reasons for it. He was using a new instrument with which he was not familiar and was reluctant to turn it loose. Furthermore, he was working in a room whose acoustical properties for such assertive instruments as piano and violin were unknown. This was the first time the center dining room had ever been used for a recital of this kind. Actually, its acoustics are pretty good and fully capable of coping with fiddle or piano.

Becknell was a most impressive accompanist. He was never aggressive, even when the mood of the music could have sustained a more vigorous approach, yet his solid backing was always there. The Beethoven, although more of a miniature than a full-blown sonata, was distinguished by its precise balance, thanks to his delicate singing touch.

Some 15 displays in all, consisting of about 40 pictures each, are being shown at schools throughout the Green Bay Diocese. Reproductions in the show include examples of collage, mosaic, sgraffito, casein, watercolor, stinging designs and mobiles. (Post-Crescent Photo)

Bernstein's Latest Youth Concert Featured Chopin on an Accordion (??)

BY ROBERT BELOW

Leonard Bernstein's latest televised concert - for - young - people on January 26 included, among other things, a performance of the last movement of Chopin's F Minor Piano Concerto by a young accordionist — on the accordion, that is. This young man, 19-year-old Stephen Dominko, from Connecticut, was one of seven young performers who were winners in the New York Philharmonic's yearly competition for young soloists.

So, we must conclude that Leonard Bernstein has once again come up with something unusual. Indeed, one sometimes feels that Leonard Bernstein values the unusual just because it is unusual, regardless of its real value. I, for one, did not find the accordion performance of Chopin either revealing or satisfying. I think Bernstein was just carried away by a wild idea.

Some of his wild ideas have been good ones, though. For instance, it was Bernstein who gave the first performance and made the first recording of Charles Ives' Second Symphony, after 50-odd years of neglect. The resurrection of this beautiful piece might not seem so wild an idea — after all, it was composed at the turn of the century — but the fact remains that no other conductor bothered about it.

Other of Mr. Bernstein's accomplishments and innovations have been valuable. The New York Philharmonic has been fully justified in the step it took when it hired Mr. Bernstein as its permanent conductor. This was indeed quite a step. Not only was Bernstein an American but he was very young. New York's conductors typically had been very European and usually old — or at least middle-aged. It was about time a major American orchestra hired a native son (I think no other one has done so yet), and if Bernstein has on occasion shown poor judgement, as I think he did the other night, he has nevertheless provided some freshness in New York's stale musical life.

But he has announced his resignation from the post. He will keep his finger in the pie, he will give up the chief responsibilities of conductor. Who will the Philharmonic hire to take his place? Another American? Or have they had enough of that, and will they find a safe middle-aged European? Whoever it is won't find it easy to fill Bernstein's shoes. I wonder who the selection would be, if the orchestra players themselves were responsible for the choice? Such is not the case, of course, though perhaps it should be.

The televised concert of Jan. 26 was impressive. We heard seven young soloists, the youngest being 13. This was Mark Salkind, of California, an oboist, one of four soloists (violin, oboe, bassoon, cello), who played the entire Haydn Sinfonia Concertante, a work for those instruments plus string orchestra. An apprentice conductor Juan Pablo Izquierdo, a Chilean, conducted the first movement. And in the second and third movements, Sylvia Caduff of Switzerland (yes, a young lady) was the leader. She too is an apprentice conductor to the orchestra, and like Mr. Izquierdo, she was selected through the Dmitri Mitropoulos competition for conductors, named after the late former conductor of the orchestra.

In addition to Haydn and to Chopin - with - accordion, we heard a young bass, George Reid, who sang an aria from Mozart's Magic Flute, and 19-year-old Young Uek Kim, violinist from Korea, who played the first movement of Saint-Saens Violin Concerto no. 3. (I didn't even know that Saint-Saens had written three violin concertos, so I owe Mr. Bernstein thanks for that, too.) Bernstein was so taken with Mr. Kim's artistry that, after having praised it verbally, he conducted this performance himself. All the other pieces had been conducted by the two apprentice conductors.

The next program in this series will be on Thursday, Feb. 23, and will concern itself with "Charles Ives: American Pioneer". That should be a good one to watch.

'The Enterprisers,' D. Gibson Byrd

Reception at UWFVC

D. Gibson Byrd's Opening Is Feb. 12

MENASHA — A noted Wisconsin painter's year in England is reflected in an exhibition scheduled to open next Sunday, Feb. 12, at the University of Wisconsin-Fox Valley Center.

The painter, D. Gibson Byrd, will be on hand for a reception in his honor from 2-4 p.m. in the Center student lounge.

In 1966 Byrd, professor and chairman of the UW Madison campus art department was visiting professor in a British university. His work in the current gouache exhibit depicts what the artist, in a note on the show, has called "two levels" of reaction.

"On the first level," according to Byrd, "there was the intense satisfaction of responding quite directly to the sights, sounds, light and general quality of the new environment. Several of the pictures represent that aspect of the work."

"On the second level are a group of pictures that represent reflections and commentary on the happenings in America that I read about in various publications or heard about in the news programs. Some of these pictures are constructed with more or less the same pictorial means as the first group. Others became, because of their content, more diagrammatic or chart-like.

"All the pictures, even the ones about America, were the result of my being out of my ordinary context for a year. In a way, I felt I could look around me with some freshness and, at the same time, develop a dialogue with myself about what was going on at home."

Typical of the paintings in the Fox Valley Center show is a work titled "Diagram: The Balance." It features facing halves of a coin. On one side of the coin is the harsh, long-haired profile of a youth, while on the reverse is the countenance of an older, well-fleshed citizen.

"Gibson Byrd's work is unique in that he has painted the human figure since he began painting and has not changed his style to follow the op- or pop-art fads," said William A. King, assistant professor of art at the Fox Valley Center. King and Byrd met at the University of Tulsa, where both were educated, and have been friends for many years.

"What makes Byrd's work so interesting is his unwillingness to forsake traditional values of craftsmanship in order to make his frequently caustic comments on America's contemporary problems," King said. "Byrd is aware of the latest ideas, but his work is a smooth continuum — he has a style peculiar to himself."

Byrd, who has been with the UW art department 11 years, also studied at the University of Iowa. His English exhibition may be seen at the Fox Valley Center through the end of the month.

Zoertich Hits 32 Points

DePaul Downs MU

CHICAGO (AP) — Bob Zoertich scored 32 points Saturday night to lead DePaul University past Marquette 79-74 for the Blue Demons 10th triumph of the season.

Marquette, losing for the seventh time in 19 games, nearly caught DePaul in the final two minutes, after being behind by as many as 14 points.

Marquette, trailing 39-27 at halftime, rallied in the second half behind Bob Wolf, George Thompson and reserve Brad Luchini. The trio scored 40 points among them.

Marquette closed the gap to 77-74 with 11 seconds left on a jump shot by Luchini. But the Demons retrieved a jump ball and Rich Shealy drove the length of the court for the final points.

Zoertich, who scored 16 points in each half, got help from Mike Norris who collected 19.

Louisville '5' Tips Cincinnati

Third-Ranked Unit Averages Only MVC Setback

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Third-ranked Louisville moved a step closer to a Missouri Valley Conference basketball championship Saturday night with a 65-57 victory over Cincinnati.

Cincinnati, the only team to defeat Louisville in conference play this season, was in danger of being chased out of the gym in the first half when Louisville raced to a 17-point lead at 32-15.

But, the Bearcats, now are 4-4 in MVC play, narrowed the gap to 37-28 at halftime.

Cincinnati pulled within four points shortly after the second half began but never caught up.

Louisville, now 7-1 in the MVC, was paced by 6-foot-8 Westley Unseld, who scored 19 points and pulled down 10 rebounds. Sophomore Butch Eard added 14.

Rick Roberson of Cincinnati scored 16 points and had 10 rebounds for the Bearcats.

Gary Hovey Paces Lakeland Victory

SHEBOYGAN (AP) — Gary Hovey scored 35 points Saturday to lead Lakeland to a 115-93 victory over Eureka and regained an undisputed first place berth in the Gateway basketball conference.

The Muskies, who led 54-32 at the half, have a 6-0 conference record and are 16-2 for the season. The Red Devils are 5-1 in conference play and 9-7 for the year.

First Negroes in SEC Have No Race-Problem Thoughts

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Nat Northington and Greg Page will become the first Negroes to play major varsity sports in the Southeastern Conference, but neither apparently fears a race problem.

They say their only interest is in playing the best football possible at the University of Kentucky.

Neither Northington nor Page had any thoughts about playing in the SEC until Kentucky scouts contacted them, they said in an interview.

After that, Northington said, "It was a kind of hard decision to make, but once I got here, there wasn't much of a problem at all."

Page, whose home now is at Middlesboro in Eastern Kentucky, said he was one of a few Negroes in a Little League program as a child and was the only Negro on his high school freshman team in Minnesota.

Kentucky adopted an official policy of integrated athletics early in 1963, but it was three years before Northington and Page became the first Negroes to receive major athletic scholarships.

Season Has Good Start Despite Decreased Pressure

110-Pounder Tops First Sturgeon Take

BY JIM HARP
Post-Crescent Outdoor Editor

Despite a decrease in pressure and a quirk of Mother Nature, the 1967 sturgeon spearing season on sprawling Lake Winnebago got off to a relatively good start Saturday.

As of 4 p.m. Saturday, a total of 21 of the big fish had been checked in at Conservation Department registration stations and no doubt a few more would be turned in by nightfall.

Largest of the sturgeon taken on opening day was a 110-pounder speared by Steve Kaminski, of Stevens Point. Kaminski took his big fish about 10 a.m. while in a shanty off Waverly Beach.

Some Larger Ones

The area off Waverly, which has a history of producing a good number of sturgeon and also some of the larger ones, lived up to its reputation Saturday. A total of six of the 21 early registrations came in at the Waverly checking station.

Gordon Priegel, fishery biologist from the area conservation headquarters at Oshkosh, said that there were 40 to 50 per cent fewer sturgeon spearkers out on the ice Saturday compared to past years. Several factors have contributed to the lack of spearkers, in Priegel's estimation, including the poor condition of the lake's ice early in the season and Saturday's blowing snow and wind which greatly reduced visibility on Winnebago.

Here is a run-down of the early reports from checking stations:

Perfect Conditions

Waverly, six sturgeon; Paynes Point, Neenah, three; Wendt's Bar, Van Dyne, one; Calumet Harbor, two; Brotherton, three; Eckers Road, two and Stockbridge, four.

Ohio State Tips Badgers In Overtime Duel, 90-84

Wisconsin Erases 17-Point Deficit but Falls Victim To Sepic's Sharp-Shooting

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Ron Sepic recovered from a dazing head injury to lead Ohio State to a 90-84 Big Ten basketball victory over Wisconsin in overtime Saturday after the Buckeyes had wasted a 17-point lead.

Sepic cracked a 78-78 tie with two long jump shots early in the extra session to trigger a decisive seven-point spurt. He finished with 26 points, sinking 12 of 16 shots from the floor.

Sepic had to leave the game in the first half after crashing head first into the bleachers when he was bumped on a driving layup.

Wisconsin, behind 13 points at the half, inched ahead on a pair of free throws by Jim Johnson later in the game before Sepic sank a jump shot to create a 76-76 deadlock which forced the overtime.

Wisconsin sophomore Chuck Nagle took scoring honors with 28 points.

Wisconsin led only for 50 seconds early in the game and 13 seconds late in the second half.

Trail by 17

The Badgers could hit only 24.5 per cent of their field goal attempts in the first half and fell behind as much as 39-22 before a mild recovery brought them back to 47-34 at intermission.

With Nagle and Jim McCallum beginning to swish long shots, Wisconsin rallied to tie the game at 67-67 on a five-on-one fast break with 3:44 to go.

Sepic helped keep the Buckeyes ahead until Bill Hosket, Ohio State's leading rebounder, was called for his fifth foul for pushing beneath the basket with 1:13 left. Jim Johnson sank both free throws for a 76-74 Badger edge.

Sepic came right back with his jumper to tie the score again and both teams missed shots in the waning seconds to force the overtime.

Johnson followed a Buckeye basket with two free throws to keep Wisconsin even, but Sepic made a 25-foot jump shot for an 80-78 lead that Ohio State never lost.

Strikes Head

Ohio State Coach Fred Taylor said Sepic struck his head on the metal supporting post for the bleacher seats when he crashed into the stands.

"His lights were never turned completely out. He just had a bad headache," said Taylor. The Ohio State coach praised Mike Swain, a cornerman shifted to the back court after the Buckeyes lost two sophomore starters because of earlier injuries. Swain responded with 19 points while Hosket added 18.

Ohio State evened its Big Ten record at 3-3 and is 9-6 overall. Wisconsin stands 2-3 and 7-8. The crowd of nearly 11,000

Loyola Upsets Iowa, 98 to 87

CHICAGO (AP) — Loyola of Chicago burst ahead in the opening five minutes of the last half behind the shooting of Jim Tillman to upset Iowa 98-87 Saturday night in the opener of a Chicago Stadium basketball doubleheader.

In snapping a four game losing streak, the Ramblers evened their record at 8-8. Loyola rammed into a 44-42 intermission lead as Tillman struck for 14 points.

Iowa, now 9-5, tied the score in the first minute of the second half on a pair of baskets by Huston Breedlove. Then in the next four minutes, the Ramblers exploded into a 58-48 bulge mainly on the firing of Tillman, Corky Bell and Doug Wardlow.

Iowa never recovered and at the 10-minute mark the hot-shooting Ramblers were moving 74-59. After that the Hawkeyes began whittling the lead on baskets by Gerry Jones and free throws by Sam Williams, but the closest they came was 89-82 with 2:15 left.

Williams, the Big Ten's top scorer, and Jones each bagged 24 points. Tillman wound up with 25 and Wardlow with 22 headed the Ramblers.

Northwestern Gets First Big Ten Loss

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Northwestern's perfect Big Ten basketball record was snapped at four straight by scrappy Illinois, 93-83, despite serious injury to Illini veteran Deon Flessner Saturday afternoon.

Northwestern, falling well below its 96.4-point average, led only once in the entire game, at 30-29, and lagged by as many as 11 points in the second half, although the Wildcats sported a trail only 81-73 with 3:10 left.

It was the third Big Ten win against two setbacks for Illinois which averaged a 104-96 loss at Northwestern on Jan. 10.

Sophomore Dave Scholtz, who did not commit a foul in the rough game, and Capt. Jim Dawson paced the Illini with 26 points each.

Jim Burns, who fouled with 2:44 remaining, was game's top scorer with 29. The Wildcats lost four players on 39 per cent against Northwestern fouls and the Illini lost three, 42 per cent in the first half they

The Wildcats crept to within five points, 80-75, on a disputed basket by Terry Gamber. After a fifth foul was whistled on Illini Les Busboom, Northwestern scored on Gamber's basket before the confused Illini had a chance to replace Busboom.

Despite the defeat, Northwestern maintained the league lead with a 4-1 record.

Xavier Quint Clinches Tie For Crown

Nips Marinette in Overtime To Avenge Its Only Loss

BY RON WITT

Clutch-shooting forward Gene Jack hit on a jump shot from outside the free throw lane and Tom Heinritz added two free throws in the final 44 seconds of an overtime period to give Appleton Xavier a 68-66 triumph over Marinette Central Catholic Saturday night and a guaranteed share of their sixth consecutive Fox Valley Catholic Conference basketball title.

The victorious Hawks ran their league record to 10 wins and one loss, and their overall season mark to a sparkling 16-1. Coach Gene "Torchy" Clark's squad thus avenged their only defeat of the season, a 71-69 loss at Marinette.

Jack, who fired in 29 points to help offset a tremendous 38-point individual performance by Marinette's Rocky Slawinski, connected on the 10-foot jumper with 44 seconds showing in the overtime to give the Hawks a 66-64 advantage. Xavier got the ball back after Marinette missed and Slawinski was forced to go foul Jack with 17 seconds to go. However, he missed the first opportunity on a bonus situation, and Xavier center Dan Hardy fouled the Cavaliers. Steve Sequin in the resulting melee with 12 seconds remaining.

Fords Losing To Ferraris in 'Continental'

Italian Machines To Regain World Sports Car Title

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP)—Italy's snarling Ferraris, fighting to regain the world sports car title, were making a runaway Saturday night of the 24-hour Continental road race—a dangerous speed duel marked by near tragedy.

In the sixth hour of the race, the machines roared through smoke and a shower of sparks from a Porsche which burst into a ball of flames after a collision bounced it off a wall on a high-banked turn.

The driver of the Porsche, Walter Habegger of Switzerland, somehow got out of the fiercely burning German machine but was hospitalized with shock and deep facial cuts.

Italy's Enzo Ferrari, who lost his world championship to Ford in 1966 after holding it without serious challenge for several years, launched a fierce counter-attack in this first race of the 1967 season.

1-2-3 Lead

After a Chaparral, which had set a hot pace for three hours, came off a wall and was too badly damaged to continue, three Ferrari prototypes shot into a 1-2-3 lead, leaving the nearest Ford Mark II far astern.

Out in front, the Ferraris jockeyed with each other, first one and then the other going to the front as pit stops were made.

Only a few spinouts marred the race in the first six hours, although the racers were moving at record speeds.

Then, going into a sharp turn in the night, the Porsche brushed a privately entered Ferrari driven by Carlos Salas of Mexico, bounced off a wall, flipped and burst into flames. Habegger miraculously escaped without burns.

Salas was unhurt but his Ferrari was taken out of the race, badly damaged.

At 10:30 p.m. (EST) Ludovico Scarfiotti of Italy and Mike Parkes of London held the lead over their Ferrari teammates.

Sanders Has 1-Stroke Lead in Hope Classic

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP)—Doug Sanders knocked five strokes off par for a 67 Saturday in a strong bid to win the $10,000 Bob Hope Desert Golf Classic for the second straight year.

As Sanders' rival big name professionals fired and fell back, dapper Doug toured the Bermuda Dunes Country Club course in 33-34—67 to post a 72-hole total of 279, nine shots under par for the route.

The 90-hole grind ends today. Tom Nieporte, a 37-year-old club pro from Locust Valley, N.Y., scored his third straight 68 for 280, while George Archer had a 66 and Frank Boynton, another club pro from East Euclid, Ohio, registered a 65, the lowest round thus far, giving each a 281.

Play over the four par 36-36—72 courses was blessed with ideal weather — sunny, warm and virtually windless.

Jack Nicklaus played the first nine in 37 and then put together a string of three straight birdies on the 11th, 12th and 13th holes. But he hit out of bounds on No. 14 and took a double bogey six. He finished with 34 and 71 for 283.

Arnold Palmer, two-time winner of the Hope event and loser to Sanders in a playoff last year, never did get untracked, and his 76 for 289, 10 strokes behind Sanders, practically eliminated Arnie in the race for the $17,600 first prize.

Billy Casper had a 73 for 285. It had been freely predicted that the Big Three plus one — Nick-

House Breaks Record; Mitchell Wins 3 Events

A disqualification that was over-ruled in the afternoon's final event provided Beloit College with its margin of victory over the Lawrence swim team Saturday at the Alexander Gym Pool.

The final score was 53-42, but had the Bucs' 400-yard freestyle relay team been disqualified, the verdict would have been reversed with the Vikes on top, 49-46.

The dispute broke out when the assistant judge ruled that Beloit's last man in the relay had a false take-off, thus disqualifying the relay unit and giving Lawrence the meet victory.

On an appeal from the Beloit coach which correctly claimed that the assistant judge did not have the authority to make such a ruling, starter Don Boya over-ruled the disqualification.

Vike captain Pete House set the meet's lone record, a new varsity and pool mark in the 50-yard freestyle with a :22.5 timing. House held the old record of :22.7.

Toc Mitchell won three individual events and House two. Mitchell captured the 200-yard individual medley, the 200-yard butterfly and the 500-yard freestyle. House took a blue ribbon in the 50 and 100-yard freestyles.

Carl Liebich splashed to victory in the 200-yard freestyle and Vern Wilmot won the diving competition for the Vikes' other firsts. Lawrence won seven events, compared to Beloit's four.

North Carolina Beats Maryland For 14th Victory

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — With all five of its starters hitting in double figures, second-ranked North Carolina led Maryland all the way to take an 85-77 victory in an Atlantic Coast Conference basketball game here Saturday.

The Terrapins, who trailed 64-42 midway of the second half, came back in the closing minutes to narrow the margin to eight points at the finish.

Larry Miller and Rusty Clark led the Tar Heel shooters with 20 points each. Rich Drescher led Maryland with 17.

Kaukauna and Neenah each had three champions, while Kimberly had one. All titles were won on decisions. Jim Crain, of New London, last year's 95-pound champion, won the 103-pound title. Steve Meixl, Kimberly, the 103-pound champ last year, took the 112-pound honors. Jay Larson, of New London, repeated as the 127-pound champion, but Menasha heavyweight, Dan Lingnfski, defending champion, was ousted by New London's Bruce Krueger, 4-2, in the first round.

Marathon Quint Rallies to Tip Trotters, 95-83

After losing four starters in the final four minutes of play, the Fox Valley Center's slight lead over Marathon County went up in smoke and the Trotters dropped a 95-83 decision. It ended their win streak at four games.

The Fox Valley unit had overcome a 44-36 halftime deficit to take a 2-point lead when the four regulars bowed out with five personals.

The Trotters' Mortell paced all scorers with 26 points. Fox Valley is now 6-4 in the conference while Marathon County is 5-5.

Terrell Has 39-4 Record

Clay Rated 4 to 1 Favorite

By JACK HAND

HOUSTON (AP) — Cassius Clay, still appealing his 1-A status in the military draft, will defend his disputed world heavyweight title for the eighth time Monday night in the Astrodome against Ernie Terrell, recognized as champ by the World Boxing Association.

Clay is a 4-1 favorite with little betting interest reported by legal Las Vegas bookmaking establishments.

The 15-round match in the unique domed arena is expected to boost the 25-year-old Clay's earnings since he won the title from Sonny Liston close to the $3 million mark.

About 35,000 fans are expected to watch the bout in person and many thousands more will see it on closed circuit television or via the two satellites to Europe and Asia. The scrap also will be carried on radio by the Mutual Broadcasting System.

The two fighters are due to enter the ring at 10:30 p.m. EST and actual fighting is due to begin at about 10:40 p.m. EST.

Reach Advantage
For the first time in his career as champ, Clay will be taking on an opponent with an advantage in height and reach. Clay, 6-foot-2½ inches, with a 79-inch reach, will be facing a stiff left jab thrown by the 6-6 Terrell with his 82-inch reach.

Clay, who prefers to be known as Muhammad Ali and is appealing his draft status on Muslim ministerial grounds, has a perfect 27-0 record with 22 knockouts. He won the crown when Liston quit in his corner at Miami Beach, Feb. 25, 1964. In two 1965 defenses he wiped out Liston in one round and stopped Floyd Patterson, another ex-champ, in 12 rounds at Las Vegas.

When Clay's comments about the Vietnam war and the complications of his draft status resulted in many states banning him from its rings, he went

Salvino Wins $10,000 Prize In Pin Meet

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Carme Salvino of Chicago eked out a 211-203 victory over Johnny Guenther of Seattle Saturday and captured the $10,000 first prize in the Professional Bowlers Association $50,000 St. Paul Open.

It was a heartbreak loss for Guenther, who needed a second strike in the 10th frame to win the nationally-televized title match.

Guenther buried the ball in the 1-3 pocket, but the 10-pin stood. Guenther was never ahead as Salvino strung four straight strikes from the second frame through the fifth.

It was Salvino's eighth PBA championship, including the PBA national title in 1962.

Guenther collected $5,000 for finishing second, while Barry Asher of Santa Ana, Calif., was third for $2,500. Jack Biondillo of Houston fourth for $2,000 and Bill Lillard of Dallas fifth for $1,500.

Indiana Cagers Edge Minnesota, 82 to 81

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Indiana weathered a 35-point outburst by Minnesota's Tom Kondla and a furious Gopher rally in the closing minutes to claim an 82-81 Big Ten basketball victory Saturday night.

Kondla fouled out with a little over three minutes to play and Indiana leading 76-71. The Hoosiers went ahead by eight, 80-72, with 2:15 to go before Minnesota rallied.

With sophomore Ray Stephens tipping in two missed field goal attempts and hitting a free throw, plus Paul Presthus hitting out of the corner, the Gophers pulled up to 80-79 with a minute to play.

Bill DeHeer got open underneath for Indiana to sink a basket, and Stephens tipped in another missed shot to leave it 82-81 with 55 seconds to play. Neither team scored again, as Minnesota lost the ball on a violation and Indiana stalled out the final 25 seconds.

DeHeer had 17 points while Butch Joyner, Jack Johnson and Erv Inninger each added 16 in Indiana's balanced attack. Behind Kondla, whose 19 points

Second-Half Rally Nets Wolves 86-74 Big Ten Triumph

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — University of Michigan, behind the second half shooting of Craig Dill and Dennis Stewart, came from behind and beat Purdue 86-74 in Big Ten basketball Saturday.

Michigan trailed by as much as 11 points in the first half, and Purdue led 37-30 at the intermission.

But the 6-10 Dill and sophomore Stewart led a tremendous Michigan comeback in the second half. Dill and Stewart got 15 points each in the second half and Dennis Bankey scored six straight points for Michigan in one flurry.

Michigan played with a patched-up lineup as starters Bob Sullivan and Jim Pitts and substitute Scott Montross were suspended for the game for missing practice.

Dill was top scorer for the game with 24 points. Stewart totaled 21 and Bankey 15.

Purdue was led by Herman Gilliam, with 20 points.

The victory left Michigan 2-4 in the Big Ten and dropped Purdue's record to 2-3.

RACINE —The Fox Valley Lutheran Foxes fought back valiantly in the closing minutes, but the clutch shooting of the Racine Lutheran squad proved to be too much, as the Foxes were handed a 74-72 setback Saturday night.

The hosts owned a seemingly secure 71-63 lead with 1:37 to play, but the pressing defense of the Foxes brought them to within two, at 73-71, with just 16 seconds on the clock. At that point, Tim Petermann of the Foxes, was fouled and went to the line with a bonus situation. He canned the first, to bring

NOTES and NOTIONS

A rose by any other name smells as sweet — and the Fox Cities Foxes by any other name will continue to attract good crowds. At least, Foxes directors hope so. The decision to change the club's identity from the Fox Cities Foxes to the Appleton Foxes came at the latest stockholders' meeting. But, the action has failed to arouse any measurable degree of protestation. Perhaps the basic premise, "that the product is more important than the name," is being proven correct. At the stockholders' meeting, representatives from Kaukauna and Little Chute were asked if they thought the name change would bring indignation or lessen support. They said, in essence, that people are interested in seeing a good baseball game, and that if the Foxes continued playing the kind of ball they have in the past, support from neighboring communities would continue—regardless of the name.

The main items in defense of the name change are simplicity ("Appleton" has been the popular designation on transportation schedules, player contracts and league standings in a number of papers) and recognition for the part the city of Appleton plays in providing the field and other facilities. The primary argument against the name change is that other entities of the Fox Cities won't get "masthead" credit for the considerable role they've played in the 9-year success story of the Foxes.

It's important to note, though, that this is not a reversion to the more limited Appleton Papermaker administration. The current board of directors has a broad base that includes representation for the whole area. The Foxes' need for support is somewhat similar to that of the Green Bay Packers, who are backed by the entire Valley—most of the state, for that matter. Yet, there has been no suggestion that they drop their localized name and become the "Fox Valley Packers" or the "Wisconsin Packers." Whether the same feeling will greet the localization of the Foxes' identity perhaps won't be known for certain until the '67 attendance figures are in.

It looks as though the Chicago Black Hawks may finally make it. The Hawks, who have never won a National Hockey League title, were leading by some 11 points at last check. In each of the last five years, or so, the Chicagoans led for a good portion of the season, only to fade in the stretch drive. (Four years ago, they wasted a 9-point lead with only 11 games to go. The Hawks have had the best personnel in the league (invariably garnering three or four spots on the 6-man all-star team) but, inexplicably, have failed to take the crown. It's a safe bet that no Hawk fan will consider the current lead safe until every rival has been mathematically eliminated.

The passing of Verne Lewellen from the official Green Bay Packer scene the other day was accompanied by surprisingly little fanfare. Lewellen, one of the magic names of early Packer history and a continuing supporter of Packer fortunes in various administrative posts, retired as business manager at age 65. In the 34 years since Lewellen's retirement as a player, the Packers have failed to come up with a punter of Lewellen's equal — and there have been few in the entire NFL, for that matter.

Playing in the days before football specialization, Lewellen had many other duties besides punting, and he was an outstanding all-around halfback. He ranks eighth in all-time Packer scoring (with 301 points), and only four Packers have scored more career touchdowns than Verne's 50. They are the incomparable Don Hutson and three members of the current Green Bay world title team: Paul Hornung, Jim Taylor and Max McGee. Lewellen played in the Packers' first golden era (consecutive titles in 1929, '30 and '31) with such stalwarts as Johnny Blood, Red Dunn, Lavvie Dilweg, Jug Earpe, Cal Hubbard and Mike Michalske. Green Bay and Wisconsin are forever indebted to early Packers of Lewellen's stature, for without them there would be no "modern-day" titles, no Vince Lombardi era and no "Green Bay miracle."

Explaining to a New York writer why he was willing to risk Tom Moore in a trade for the Rams' Ron Smith (and Dick Arndt) Vince Lombardi said, "I brought in quarterback Ron Smith for a look. That is what I must do. pay to look. I will pay to bring anyone in who is worth a look." Lombardi also stressed the danger of remaining static with a championship team. "I try to calculate a way to better ourselves in some position every year. Even though players may be playing well for you, and probably have another good year to go, sometimes it is advisable to trade them before it is too late—if they can be replaced." Wonder what Vince is planning for '67.

I don't know about you, but the build-up (particularly the TV brand) about the Super Bowl and "Super Sunday" have left me allergic to the word "super," which once was a highly useful word when used in moderate action. I may never shop at another super-market; I may never use single champion—public, parochial and private school, another superintendent's title; I may never follow an Dodgeville's recent winning of the title and the strong other episode of Superman, and I may never refer again showing of Alma in last year's state tourney add fuel to a super-star even to indicate how Lew Alcindor ranks among collegiate basketball players. Oh well, this allergy may be only temporary. . . . It may well disappear by the time another Super Bowl rolls around—especially if the Packers are in it.

The Wisconsin Masonic Journal recently quoted pro football scouts on the size and speed attributes they look for in prospects. The average pro fullback weighs 225, stands 6-foot-2 and runs the 40-yard dash in five seconds. "Pro norms" for other offensive positions are: split end, 6-3, 210 and a .04.9 clocking for the 40-yard dash; tight end, 6-3, 225 and .05.1; flankers, 6-1, 195 and .04.9; tackles, 6-4, 225 and .05.3; guards 6-2, 245 and .05.2; centers, 6-3, 245 and .05.2; halfbacks 6-0, 205 and .04.9; and quarterbacks 6-2, and 205 (with no particular concern about speed).

Among figures for defensive players are: tackles, 6-4, 260 and .05.5; middle linebackers, 6-3, 249 and .05.3; and safety, 6-0, 190 and .04.9.

Iowa is experimenting with a 2-class high school basketball tournament this year. The state's 128 largest schools will play in Class AA, while the other 419 schools will compete in Class A. This action was taken by the state board of control after a survey of member schools gave a slight preference to the new set-up, which gives

Grenoble Facilities For Olympic Contests Cause Some Problems

By HARVEY HUDSON
GRENOBLE, France (AP) — The sports facilities being built for the 1968 Winter Olympic Games still are rising out of the winter mud. But words are pouring faster than concrete about the eventual disposition of the new playgrounds. There is general agreement that Grenoble can't afford an ice palace seating 15,000 persons or a speed skating oval that will accommodate the 100 French speed skaters. Nor can the village of Alpe d'Huez hope to maintain a bobsled run, or Saint Nizier a 90-meter ski jump. Bobsledding and ski jumping are not widely practiced or widely followed in France. Hubert Dubeout, the mayor of Grenoble, says flatly, "the ice palace is too big for a city of 330,000 persons."

Give a Return
Francoise Missoffe, French minister for Youth and Sports, has estimated that the Olympic will cost one billion francs—$200 million in American money. But he says "95 per cent of the money invested will find a use and will give a return after the games."

This will certainly be true for the new roads, the 3,000 apartments from the Olympic village, and press center, the new railway station, new city hall and expanded communications facilities. Most of these things were urgently needed in any case. Awarding the Winter Olympics to Grenoble was only an inspiration to do the work sooner.

But many people in Grenoble protested that the city—suffering growing pains from industrial and university expansion—should never have asked for the games in the first place. They maintained that there were many other urgent needs that should have been satisfied.

New Orleans '5' Eyes Bob Pettit

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The New Orleans Buccaneers, this city's team in the newly formed American Basketball Association, wants former pro star Bob Pettit to be coach and director of player personnel.

Sean Morlon Downey Jr., president of the Bucs, said Friday Pettit had told the group he would take the offer under advisement. "He is our first and only choice," said Downey.

Smaller schools a better chance to win a championship. There has been some sentiment for a similar plan in Wisconsin, but the majority still feel that a single state champion (public school), is preferable. The ideal arrangement, of course, would be the crowning of a true single champion—public, parochial and private school.

Return to Stardom Has Mellowed Slugger

NEW YORK (AP) — Frank Robinson, full of honors and mellow now in his regained stardom, has set his sights on a lofty pinnacle — to become a major league baseball manager. "The prejudice against Negroes in baseball is dying to a certain extent but it is still there," he said calmly. "It is just a matter of time before some owner breaks the color line with a manager."

Hudson, Bing Rated Top NBA Rookies

Russell Fourth In Scoring Among The Newcomers

NEW YORK (AP) — Dave Bing, a 1966 All-America with Syracuse University, and Lou Hudson, former Minnesota star, have eclipsed Cazzie Russell, the $200,000 star from Michigan, in the race for the Rookie of the Year honor in the National Basketball Association.

Bing, now with the Detroit Pistons, is the top rookie scorer in the pro ranks with 1,010 points in 53 games through Jan. 31. His average is 19.1. Not only is the 6-foot-3 native of Washington, D.C., the leading scorer, but he also is the No. 1 rookie in assists with 216 and third in rebounds with 245.

Hudson, 6-5, who hails from Greensboro, N.C., has tossed in 929 points in 52 games for the St. Louis Hawks for an average of 17.9. He is ahead of Bing in rebounds, however, with 251, a mark exceeded only by Erwin Mueller with the Chicago Bulls. Mueller, 6-8 who starred for the San Francisco Dons, is far in front in rebounds with 372 and is third behind Bing and Hudson in the scoring parade. He has tallied 699 points in 57 games for a 12.3 average.

Russell, who became the most publicized rookie in the NBA, since Wilt Chamberlain when he signed with the New York Knicks for a reported record $200,000, is the fourth high scorer with 519 points in 53 games with 106.

However, the 6-5½ Russell, a native of Chicago, has played much less than Bing. Hudson used for international champion-ship in ice hockey or figure skating. An indoor athletics track can be installed, as well as handball and volleyball courts. Variety shows or political meetings could also be held there.

Use as Playgrounds
Suggestions for the speed skating oval are rare. It could be used as a children's play-ground in the summer, or per-naps for roller skating. Efforts may be made to stage international speed skating races, but France never before has had a speed skating rink and specta-tor interest in the sport is minimal.

To get at least some use out of the huge track at Villard de Lans, work will be started to develop military and university teams in these sports. International federations will be invited to hold European and world championships on the runs.

Other nations may be asked to use the facilities for their training. French-German cooperation on preparing their teams for Olympic Games has already made some progress and this might be expanded.

Officials hope that some enthusiasm may be generated by the Olympics for such sports as ski jumping so that it would be feasible to stage international meets. Meantime, much thought and talk is going into the discussions to keep the Olympic facilities from becoming useless.

Fred Schaus, Los Angeles coach, is especially high on Clark and Chambers. "Clark is probably our second best defensive player and first among the guards," Schaus said. "He was a fourth-round pick and we've never got this much mileage from a fourth-round pick."

As for Chambers, "We had to wait for him to develop offensively. He's coming along and really becoming a good offensive rebounder against guys who are bigger than he is."

Has Knee Surgery
He had an operation on his right knee after the 1965 Series and figures he will be back in top physical form by spring — "although right now my leg is 1½ inches smaller in both the calf and the thigh because I haven't been able to exercise on the banquet circuit. I need to build it back up."

"I figure I have maybe seven or eight years left in baseball. I try to think about the good years, however. I think I have at least four or five good years. When the good years stop coming I will get out. I hope I will be sensible about it. I admire men like Ted Williams, Joe DiMaggio and Sandy Koufax, who quit before they started the down grade."

"As for managing, basically all managers work the same way. They use the same strategy. Once in a while one will try something different and if it works the rest copy it."

"If you have managerial material you can manage a ball club. But a 250 hitter is going to hit 250. There is no way to teach him to hit 350. The manager is more important."

Weekends in Appleton are a 2 1/2 hour triplicate in the KCA General Office League at the 41 days with the Wisconsin State Bowl.

Men's Tournament currently underway at Hahn's Lanes and the 41 Bowl.

Motels, hotels, eating places and bars got a glimpse of what it will be like when the first teams competed last weekend. However, it was just a sampling of what will take place in the future since quite a few of the teams were from the Fox Cities area. That is, with the exception of the opening shift on Saturday when teams from the Builder's Exchange League of Milwaukee led off, just as they have done in 28 previous tournaments.

A tournament to benefit the March of Dimes is underway at bowling lanes in this area, according to Curt Biggars who is in charge.

League bowlers can bowl in the tourney on the same night they are competing in the league simply by filling out an entry form before they start to bowl. Prizes will be given on the state and local basis.

When Wayne Borsche hit his 266 game in the Candy Bar Couples League at the 41 Bowl it earned an ABC Century award for him. Borsche carries a 166 average in the circuit.

In the first of three league rounds, the Superior Electric team placed last in the Knights of Columbus National League at the 41 Bowl.

At the end of the second round the team had improved to a point where it placed second, 2½ points out of first.

Bob Helms, of the Smelt team, rolled games of 170, 171 and 172 on the final night of bowling in the Fish Couples League at Hahn's Lanes.

Virginia Shimek had lines of 140, 141 and 142 in the Western Couples League at the 41 Bowl.

Pat Peters had a 113 triplicate in the Ladies Lucky Strike League and Charles Hahn fired action come on out.

Bob Johnson, Of Orioles, to Appear Here

Bob Johnson, utility infielder for the world champion Baltimore Orioles, will speak at the Fox River Valley Traffic Club's Sports Night dinner Tuesday at the Terrace Motor Inn.

Johnson, who owns a .269 lifetime batting average in the majors, holds the American League record of six straight pinch-hits, which he established in 1964 with the Orioles. In his 6½ years of big-league ball, Johnson has also played for Kansas City and Washington.

In 1962, Johnson hit the first home run in the new Washington D.C. stadium while President Kennedy watched.

Cowboy Sign Offensive End

DALLAS, Tex. (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys added a second offensive end prospect to their 1967 training roster Saturday, signing up 96 sprinter Craig Baynam of Georgia Tech. Baynam was the Cowboys' 12th round draft choice last year as a future and was also selected as the ninth round future of the AFL Miami Dolphins. Previously, Dallas had signed tight end prospect Austin Denney, 220-pound Tennessee All-American and the team's 11th choice of last year.

Wildlife Moves Closer to City in Search of Food

Simple Feeders Helpful to Pheasants In Winter Months

BY JIM HARP

Post-Crescent Outdoor Editor

The telephone jingled on the desk and a voice on the other end of the line said:

"There were seven pheasants, four roosters and three hens in my back yard this morning. Isn't this pretty unusual?"

The next day a fellow stopped on the street and said:

"Boy, if you'd like to get pictures of some pheasant roosters you should get out to the intersection of A and OO."

so close to homes and buildings. The answer lies in the fact that because of the crusted snow, cover the birds are having a tough time finding food and they are losing some of their inborn wariness in their search for something to eat.

As has been pointed out by conservation wardens and other game management officials, this is the critical time of the year for wildlife. Food is a big problem and in addition, birds manager for the east central area, has contributed two sketches which show feeders proven successful for pheasants. One is made of 1½-inch mesh woven wire and the other is a simple board feeder.

The wire basket type is designed to hold about 50 to 75 pounds of ear corn. This type of feeder enables the corn to be exposed above the ground and pheasants can reach food even after a light snowfall.

The "Huns" seem to prefer to scratch for their food on the ground. A simple lean-to supplied with oats and a mixture of small grains would probably be best for the partridge.

interest in this feeding during the late winter. It takes only minutes a day to keep a feeder supplied and clean for the wildlife. In return there will be the enjoyment of watching the

(This intersection is just a short ways west of the Appleton city limits).

And then, early one morning while driving to work, a beautiful rooster glided in front of the car and landed in a field where it joined at least a dozen other pheasants right along Highway 96 between Little Chute and Appleton.

Many people are asking why the pheasants are being spotted and animals have to contend with snow and increased pressure from predators.

Many people have inquired about types of feeders which can be used effectively for pheasant. It is true that the birds are wary and will not always feed from the regular type feeders which can be obtained in pet shops and other business places.

Jerry Rieckhoff, district game

The spiked plank feeder, which is made by just driving No. 16 spikes through a one-inch board and sticking ears of corn on the spikes, is best used where only a few birds are being fed in an easily accessible area.

Scratch For Food

Rieckhoff explained that both pheasants and Hungarian partridge will utilize the corn, but Shown Here Are two types of pheasant feeders which are relatively simple to make and very inexpensive. The accompanying story gives details on use and care of the feeders and their importance to wild birds in the winter months.

Another important part of the diet of pheasants and partridge is grit. A small box or pile of pit-run gravel or screenings will take care of this necessary item.

People who live where pheasants and partridge are seen frequently should take a special game and the satisfaction of knowing you are doing your bit to help preserve wildlife.

Those who do not have wild animals in their yards can make smaller feeders and it won't take long before birds will be gathering outside your window.

Over the Fan-Tail comes a 97-pound sailfish as Lee Wulff, left, and the captain of his 20-foot fishing boat from Panama's Club de Pesca bring the big one aboard. The sequence which shows Wulff bringing in the big sail on fly-tackle equipment is a feature of the "American Sportsman" show over ABC-TV this afternoon. WLUK-TV, Green Bay, will have the show on at 3 p.m.

SINGLE SHOT

The wind was blowing harder now and the cold numbed the tips of our ears, but it really didn't matter. We were coming off Big Green Lake with the warm feeling that is known after taking a limit of plump lake trout.

It was Wednesday and Post-Crescent Photographer Ed Deschler and your reporter had spent about four hours bouncing a fistful of minnows off the 130-foot depths. In that space of time we had our four lakers, all running between the 19 and 21-inch mark.

Now we were headed back to shore, riding on Bud Norton's bobsled which was being pulled by a snowmobile. Our fish bounced about in the box which was mounted on the bobsled and Deschler and Norton chatted about the good fishing.

Single Shot cupped a warm glove over one ear to fend off the bite of the cold and traded words with another angler who was riding back. Howie Johnson, of Burlington, had fished all morning and was still looking for his first bite. He was amazed at our luck and Norton informed us that we were the first ones going back to shore with the limit from his shanties that day.

Other anglers were catching fish though. Six fellows in a shack next to us had four fish including one dandy that went about 30 inches. When lake trout get this big they are normally in the 8 to 12-pound class.

After a quick trip from Appleton to Norton's Restaurant, just west of the Green Lake city limits, we had to wait a little for a ride to the shanties. Because the ice is only four to six inches thick in most places there still is no car travel on Green Lake.

Fishermen are taken out either by snowmobile, on devices such as the bobsled or they just plain walk. It is not a very long hike to the fishing grounds.

The ride to Green Lake can be accomplished in relatively quick fashion. Highway 41 whisks you south to the Highway 44 cutoff which goes to Ripon and then Highway 23 goes to Green Lake. All the roads are good except for a portion of 44 which is quite bumpy and rough about 10 miles before you reach Ripon.

When the bobsled loaded up to take us out there were five other fishermen who hopped on. In about 10 minutes we were at the spot where Norton has his shanties and we were assigned one along with two anglers from Green Bay.

Not long after we had baited each hook with a tasty morsel of one shiner through the eyes, another through the back and then another through the eyes (that's right, three minnows) Deschler brought the first laker up from the depths.

One of the Green Bay fishermen caught a fish 10 minutes later and then a lull set in. Deschler had a couple of bites, but failed to connect and it was not until between 11:30 and noon that this writer brought one out that proved to be the heaviest of the day.

Line was still spread around the floor of the shanty when Deschler suddenly set the hook into another laker. About an hour later we filled out the bag for the day and hitched a ride back to shore.

Fish have been biting exceptionally well at Green Lake and this is evident from the number of fishermen who are out daily.

Norton charges $4 during the week per fisherman. This includes the heated shack, your bait and two lines. About all you have to bring is yourself and your lunch. The weekend charge is $5 per man.

This will be a big day at Green Lake since the annual trout derby is on. They have a "trout queen" and many prizes in fishing contests. Thousands of fishermen will be out trying to lure lakers from the depths.

Incidentally, Deschler refuses to believe any part of it, but Single Shot was wearing his "Lucky Hat" Wednesday. Need more be said?

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — "The most important thing I got out of being a newspaperboy was a strong pair of legs and enough money to buy my first baseball glove."

Those are the words of Willie Mays, who has used his legs and glove in center field for the San Francisco Giants.

Mays was named by the California Newspaperboy Foundation as Yesterday's Newspaperboy—Today's Leader. He got the award at a breakfast meeting today of the California Newspaper Publishers Association.

Mays delivered the Birmingham, Ala., News in Fairfield, Ala.

Bow Hunters Resolution Raps Merger Objects to Kellett Recommendation on Conservation Unit

MILWAUKEE — A resolution opposing reorganization of the Wisconsin Conservation Department and its merger with the Department of Resource Development highlighted the annual meeting of the Wisconsin Bow Hunters Association in Shawano. Some 350 members attended the gathering.

The merger has been proposed by the Kellett Committee on Government Reorganization, and a bill to bring about the change is expected to be introduced into the legislature.

The resolution criticized points in the Kellett recommendation which would disband the present 6-man Conservation Commission, transfer the department's Vacation and Travel Service to a new state agency, and dull the voice rank and file sportsmen now have in resource management through the Conservation Congress.

Urges Members

In addition, the resolution urged association members to make their position known to their elected state representatives.

Emil Huebner, Milwaukee, president of the Bow Hunters, pointed out that the sport has grown to include more than 70,000 licensed archers. He urged bow and arrow hunters to take a more active role in all phases of conservation.

Other proposed conservation legislation was also discussed in detail by association members.

Otis Bersing, recently retired from the Game Management Division of the conservation department, was honored for his more than 25 years of liaison work with the Wisconsin Bow Hunters.

Officers re-elected for 1967 include Huebner, president; Prof. Carl Hulbert, Milton, vice-president; and Robert and Anne Fancher, Menomonee Falls, treasurer and secretary, respectively. New directors selected were Tom Williams, Omro, and Charles Ramsey, Green Bay.

Governor Plans To Take Part In Coyote Hunt

MADISON — Gov. Warren P. Knowles is among Wisconsin sportsmen planning to take part in the organized coyote hunt in Phillips Feb. 11 and 12.

Gov. Knowles accepted an invitation to participate from the Phillips Lions Club, sponsors of the event.

Sportsmen from all parts of Wisconsin have registered for the hunt so far, according to James Parent, president of the Lions Club. "Additional reservations come in every day," Parent said, "and we expect to have a good crew to help us prove coyote hunting is fun."

Registrations may still be sent to Northern Wisconsin Coyote Headquarters, Phillips, 54555. The $6 fee should be registration, Saturday night dinner, and hunter's breakfast both days.

CAMPING with VAN

Not too many people ever get into desperate situations while camping, but just a taste of the outdoors seems to set most of us to speculating as to what we would do in dire circumstances. Actually, success in coping with emergencies depends on a combination of logic and experience — and sometimes one of these qualities will suffice even in the absence of the other. The one indispensable ingredient for safety in emergencies, though, is calmness and the absence of panic.

Dear Van — What do you do when you're on a wilderness hike, have lost your compass, and the sky is obscured by clouds for several days in a row so there's no way to determine directions? A.S.C.

Didn't you leave out a few things? You forgot to mention that you were out of food, your matches were soaked, and you were surrounded by a ring of wolves with tongues lolling out just waiting for you to expire.

I'd bet dollars to nickels that this is a theoretical question, but still it deserves an answer. Any experienced woodsman, once he leaves the marked trails, hangs on to his compass for dear life, since it could possibly be the key to staying alive. Many wilderness travelers carry two compasses, one in the pocket for use, and a spare in the pack for emergency. You also need a good topographical map, available at a moderate cost for most parts of this country. If the features of the countryside are at all distinctive, such a map will help you find your way even without a compass.

If you don't have either compass or map, climb to the highest point in sight for a good view in all directions; if you spot a river or creek follow it downstream and eventually it will lead you to civilization. If none of these plans work, just relax and enjoy the situation. The important thing is to avoid panic; pitch your tent or build a lean-to shelter and stay put till the sun comes out which it's bound to do within a few days.

As a matter of fact, if you don't let yourself worry the enforced leisure of a stay like this can prove to be a very enjoyable interlude.

Dear Van — The question of ventilation in a tent has come up several times in your column. It seems to me that with a cloth tent the pores in the fabric would provide enough ventilation to be safe. If I'm wrong, tell me why. P. O. A.

The pores in the fabric don't create any movement of air to replace the stale air with fresh. Any combustion type stove, heater or lantern will exhaust oxygen from the air much faster than it can be replaced without at least one vent near the top of the tent and one near the bottom to provide circulation. Even without a heater in the tent I always leave the vents open; I find I sleep better and get more rest with an adequate supply of fresh air.

Dear Van — A mail order house offers a short sleeping bag to cover the lower half of the body while the upper half is covered by a down filled parka or jacket. This sounds sensible to me. What do you think? C. L.

It's workable and has the advantage of compactness. However, I prefer to air my down jacket at night rather than making it do double duty 24 hours a day. For mountain climbing, where every ounce is critical, the shortie sleeping bag is a practical answer.

Post-Crescent Outdoor Editor Jim Harp usually takes a ribbing about the fish and game he doesn't get, but in this picture photographer Ed Deschler caught Harp in action as he pulled a conservation notes

BY DALE MOREY AND AL VANDER BLOEMEN
Conservation Wardens

The days from now until the spring breakup are critical days for all wildlife favorable weather will assist in pulling them through, bad weather will be rough on them and may take many unless man lends a helping hand.

If you have been feeding, be sure you continue to make food available. The birds have by now learned to depend on you and if you don't continue to make it available to them, they will starve.

If you haven't been feeding, and know where there is a flock of birds, you can assist them greatly through these critical days by making food available to them.

Can Advise You
Your local warden can advise you where you can get the necessary feed if you don't have any available.

These are critical days, not only for small birds and animals, but also for deer. Their needs however are somewhat different. Dogs will harm deer in these coming weeks more than anything else. Even without deep snow, dogs raise havoc with deer and especially at this time of the year.

Most of the dogs that cause the damage are not wild, as used to be common belief. They are hunting dogs, farm dogs and pet dogs.

Let's all pitch in and help our wild friends through these critical days. This extra effort could pay great dividends come next hunting season.

Some of you will probably be working on your boats during these winter months. In some cases you will be making necessary repairs. Many of you will be giving them a new paint job.

When placing the numbers on your boat, be sure you space them properly.

The law requires a space the size of the Letter W between the letters and numbers. The numbers and letters must be at least 3 inches in height. They must be block type numerals and letters and of a color which will contrast with the color of the background.

We noticed considerable improvement in the proper spacing and color of numbers last boating season. There were still those, however, that did not meet the requirements.

Also, the registration decals shall be affixed in line with and 3 inches from the identification numbers toward the stern.

Saigon Black Market Back, Better Than Ever

By FRED S. HOFFMAN
Associated Press Writer
SAIGON, South Vietnam (AP) — The downtown black market, driven off the streets with great force last year, is back in full swing — riding the crest of buying for the lunar New Year holiday.

Hundreds of rickety stalls — many rigged with GI rain ponchos for shelter — crowd the main boulevards from which the open air market was expelled by the Vietnamese police in mid-November.

The Vietnamese police have issued public warnings. But U.S. officials say they do not expect the police to act until after the Tet New Year celebration, biggest on the Vietnamese calendar, beginning Thursday.

The stalls are stacked with clothing, some of it olive drab, with canned foods, radios, cigarette lighters, liquor, batteries, medical supplies, blankets and thousands of other items.

American military officials say that many of the items on the black market actually are clever copies of American goods or were stolen many months ago, before tight controls were applied.

However, the Saigon Chamber of Commerce said it had conducted a study and found that stolen American beer was flooding the open markets in Saigon and other major cities.

The chamber study estimates that about one million cans a month are sold on the black market.

The chamber and other business groups protest that damage is done to legitimate commerce by the sale of black market goods at lower prices.

Aid Goods

Much of the goods on the stalls obviously is not military in origin, but apparently came out of the $455 million in U.S.-financed commodities pumped into the Vietnamese economy last year.

Officials of the U.S. Agency for International Development stick to a claim that only about 5 or 6 per cent of all U.S.-paid-for economic commodities are stolen or otherwise diverted.

But Sen. Ernest Gruening, D-Alaska, recently pegged the figure at around 20 per cent — which was the estimate offered by most of the sources interviewed by Associated Press reporters last fall in a survey of corruption and thievery in Vietnam.

The AID agency's own figures, distributed in Washington, conceded losses up to 20 per cent for clothing, food products, fertilizer, and certain other commodities given directly to the Vietnamese government for refugee aid, revolutionary development, and other programs.

A top U.S. investigator said the Saigon port is one of the most noticeable areas of improvement.

"This is especially true on the military side," the investigator said. "On the commercial side, there's still a lot to be done."

The U.S. Army has taken hold of things in the commercial port area, and the impact is evident.

First Team

The Vietnamese government has shaken up its port director's office. Brig. Gen. Pham Dang Lan has been replaced as director-general by a civilian, public works secretary Truong Van Thuan. "I think they have their first team in now," said an American working to straighten out the port problem.

Security in the dock area and in the river has been strengthened within the past few months and the Army's 125th Transportation Command has instituted new security measures.

Stationary checkpoints have been established on the immediate water approaches to the harbor. Here cargo barges are spot-checked as they move away from freighters being unloaded in midstream.

Motor patrol boats rove constantly between the checkpoints watching for signs of transfer of goods by bargemen to boats run by gangs of thieves.

Two companies of Vietnamese combat police have been ordered to patrol some of the areas across the river from Saigon, including a peninsula which long has been a smugglers' hangout.

But the security screen still can be penetrated.

Vietnamese police arrested members of what they said was a ring of racketeers including several port employes and military deserters.

The leader of the ring, police said, confessed to stealing 80 cases of whisky, many bolts of cloth, 60 cases of sewing machine oil and 10 cases of transformers. Transfer of the goods took place in the middle of the Saigon River, police were told.

Arrests have been rising sharply. Capt. Nguyen Tan Quoc, chief of the port police, reported that nearly 3,400 thieves had been caught in the commercial port last year — 60 per cent more than 1965.

In the immediate dock and warehouse area, U.S. police have installed new lights, barbed wire fences and a pass and badge system for workers

U.S. soldiers are stationed as commercial goods are still open to plunder.

They monitor the cargo when it arrives and at intervals throughout its stay. Similar checking is done aboard ships moored in the harbor and at the docks.

Once on the road, the commercial goods are still open to plunder.

Late in January, Vietnamese police intercepted two truckloads of radios and typewriters. The driver had picked them up at the port, but instead of delivering them to the engineering firm that ordered them, he the reason. In AID's view port congestion stems from an inability to get ships unloaded promptly and moved out.

The Army transportation experts contend it is "market congestion." They blame this on persistent failure of Vietnamese businessmen to pick up their consignments, and "injurious" permitted by AID in 1966. Those orders now are flooding into the port. Army officials claim that military cargo is moving across the docks at the rate of 1,000-1,500 tons a day, but that commercial cargo is cleared at the rate of only about 300 tons a day. In an effort to break the bottleneck, the Vietnamese port director has been armed with authority to confiscate commercial merchandise within 30 days.

A NEW HOUSE NOW?

If you've had a new house in mind lately, you're surely up to your ears in reports on the tight mortgage market. You know that interest rates have climbed, and that the amount of money to buy new houses has been short.

Why all this happened is a fairly involved story. The cold fact is that it did happen. What you want to know is simply this: when will things get better?

Better Homes and Gardens has gone to financial and government authorities in all parts of the country—raising this same question. The consensus: interest rates probably will stay at present higher levels, but more money will be available for home loans during 1967 than was the case in late 1966.

Face the fact. The days when you could get a 5 or 5 1/2 percent loan on a new house are gone. Now, 6 or 6 1/2 or 7 percent are the going rates. Some experts believe a decrease of a half percent might happen in the distant future, but most others aren't even this optimistic.

More to the point, as we'll show, it can make no sense at all to gamble on the thin chance of this decline. Every year, the total costs of new housing go up at least 3 1/2 percent. Trying to wait out a more favorable interest rate can end up costing you more money—even if the decrease happens. And, while you wait, you don't have the new house. Example: You have your eye on a new $25,000 house. Should you decide to wait, the 3 1/2 percent rise in building costs will add $875 the first year. In two years, this same $25,000 house will wear a price tag of $26,780—$1,780 more!

Obviously, a higher price means higher monthly payments. In this case, the difference is more than you would save with that 1/2-percent reduction in interest rates.

Work the example out: in order to buy the $25,000 house now, let's say you take $5,000 equity in your present house and use it as a down payment. Thus you arrange a mortgage for $20,000. You arrange it on a 25-year basis, at 6 1/2 percent. The monthly payments would come to $135.

Suppose you decide to wait for two years. At that time, your down payment (20 percent of purchase price, again) would be $5,356. The mortgage, now that this same house sells for $26,780, would be the difference—$21,434. That's $1,424 above what you would need as a mortgage amount now—if you were buying today. Even should interest rates drop that hoped-for 1/2 percent—to 6 percent—your monthly payments would be $137.97 on the same 25-year contract.

The two-year wait will cost you money. If the rates do not drop, this delay hits you still harder. Monthly payments for the same house then go up to $144.61.

Beyond all this, most of us realize that a house—even at 7 percent interest—is a better buy than anything else we go after with borrowed dollars. Financing for other purchases often costs twice as much—and these things depreciate while a house usually grows in value. In this sense, a house is the most worthwhile investment you can make, and your best protection against inflation. This, plus the priceless dividends your family will enjoy each day, can make all the negatives about tight money less important to you.

It's your decision to make, of course, but our careful study of 1967 prospects doesn't give one good reason for you to hold back—to delay that new house. Do some shopping among lenders. When you find money available—and thousands of families are this very day—don't let what is still a moderate boost in interest rates put you off. There's everything to gain, nothing financially to lose.

Vikes' Brad Childs Sets Rebounding Record, Scores 25 Points

Monmouth Rallies to Beat Lawrence

MONMOUTH, Ill. — Despite a Herculean effort by 6-foot-9 sophomore center Brad Childs, the Lawrence University Vikings absorbed their third consecutive Midwest Conference setback, a 78-69 loss to Monmouth College.

Childs, who played only briefly and didn't score in Friday night's loss to Knox, scored his season's high of 25 points and pulled down 30 rebounds, which broke the school record of 25.

With Childs pouring in nearly half of the Vikes' points in the first 20 minutes, Lawrence held a 36-35 lead at intermission. The lead switched hands several times in the early stages of the second half, but with 10 minutes to go Monmouth pulled ahead, 57-55, and held the upper hand the rest of the way.

Boost Lead
The Scots then boosted their lead to 12 points, 72-60, and coasted in for the victory.

The Vikes are now 6-8, overall, and 3-7 in the conference. Monmouth, which fell to Ripon by a single point Friday, is 3-8 in the MC play and 4-9 in all games.

Dick Schultz and Bob Townsend were the only other Vikings to hit double figures, each netting 12. Monmouth guards Don Campbell and John Geitman paced the Scots with 22 and 19 points, respectively.

Monmouth shot 47 per cent from the floor, compared to Lawrence's 34 per cent. The Scots also led in rebounds, getting 53 to the Vikes' 47.

LAWRENCE — (36-35-69) Simon, 4 1 1; Townsend, 4 3 5; Childs, 8 9 1; Bock, 4 0 1; Schultz, 4 3 1; Roosen, 0 0 3; Andrews, 2 1 3. Totals—26 17 18.

MONMOUTH — (35-42-78) Towne, 6 1 1; Kappen, 3 0 4; Noonan, 2 4 4; Campbell, 10 2 2; Geitman, 8 3 17; Weber, 1 3 0; McCreight, 2 1 2; Schoell, 0 0 1; Steinberger, 0 0 2. Totals—33 12 18.

25 Years Ago — Lawrence lost a crucial Midwest Conference game when they bowed to Monmouth, 31-30. A win would have meant first place for the Vikes, who earlier in the week had downed Knox, 50-47.

U. S. Bobsled Teams Given Title Chance

Weather-Plagued Meet Set to Begin Monday

ALPE D'HUEZ, France (AP) — The weather-plagued World Two-Man Bobsled Championships now are set to begin Monday with the United States apparently having its best chance in 30 years for a title.

American sleds driven by Robert Said of Waccabuc, N.Y., and Howard Clifton of Elnora, N.Y., had the third and fourth best times Saturday in trial runs down the icy, mile chute where the Olympic bobsled events are to be staged in 1968. Thirty-four sleds from 11 countries tested the flood-lit track in the early morning and more trials are scheduled Sunday.

Amilcare Rotta of Italy, president of the International Bobsledding Federation, said plans now are to stage the first two runs of the competition Monday and the final two Tuesday. No decision was made on the Four-Man Championships, scheduled for Feb. 11-12.

Ice Melts
The championships originally were slated to start last Friday but unseasonably warm temperatures melted the ice and made the track dangerous. Competitors have sharply criticized the chute, contending it is inadequate for the Olympics.

Europe's champion, Erwin Thaler of Austria, and the nine-time world champion from Italy, Eugenio Monti, led Saturday's training runs.

Thaler, a 37-year-old Innsbruck salesman, with Reinhold Durnthaler at the brake, flashed down the metric mile course with its 14 curves and 150-yard drop in 1 minute, 95-100ths of a second.

Monti, known as the "Red Devil," and brakeman Sergio Siropacs were timed in 1:01.29.

The United States' No. 1 sled, driven by Said and braked by Philip Duprey of Ray Brook, N.Y., had the excellent time of 1:02.33 for the third best showing. Clifton and Jim Crall of Troy, N.Y., were fourth with 1:02.65.

Fred Fortune of Lake Placid, N.Y., veteran U.S. driver, with Jim Lord of Albany, N.Y., at the brake, had a disappointing run of 1:04.47 which dropped him to 14th.

However, James Lamy of Saranac Lake, N.Y., the U.S. captain, said he would wait until today's test runs before picking the two U.S. sleds. Each country is permitted two entries.

The United States hasn't won a bobsled title since 1936.

Varnell, 84, Dies; Was Olympian, Football Referee

SEATTLE (AP) — George M. Varnell, 84, former sports editor and associate editor of The Seattle Times, died in a hospital here Saturday. He had been ill several months.

Varnell, widely known as a football referee as well as a sports writer, retired last September after 41 years with The Times.

Varnell attended the University of Chicago, where he played football under coach Amos Alonzo Stagg. In 1904, Varnell was a member of the United States Olympic track team, placing fourth in the 200 and 400-meter hurdles.

In 1908, Varnell joined the staff of the Spokane, Wash. Chronicle. He also became an umpire coach of the Gonzaga field goals and 21 of 26 free throw attempts—was a Houston game scoring record and is believed to be a state record. The previous Houston city record worked eight Rose Bowl games, was 52 points.

The 6-4 senior scored 81 points (that's right—81 points in one game) Friday night as his Houston Jones team whipped the Madison High 133-70 in a wild run and shoot spectacle.

The 81 points—made on 30 field goals and 21 of 26 free throw attempts—was a Houston game scoring record and is believed to be a state record. The previous Houston city record worked eight Rose Bowl games, was 52 points.

JINGO

ABC's 'Project Africa'

BY JINGO

Up to this point, ABC-TV has been relatively quiet about it, but a barrage of publicity must be expected soon for the network's massive project, "Africa."

What is "Africa?" In addition to being a continent, it is also a 3½-hour television special, slated for one evening this spring. ABC calls it "one of the truly unique presentations in the history of broadcasting."

Jingo has no idea what the lengthy production will really be. Publicity to date has been ambiguous. The network, in an attractive book prepared for news media, tells some about the program, but beyond boastful claims, it is difficult to get specific facts.

The only way to describe it at this point is to allow the network's prose to do the explaining. Keeping in mind that this is public relations talk, here is the lowdown:

"ABC's 'Africa' is a 3½-hour program that will be viewed, and remembered, as not only a compelling, but a total, experience. And no more total a project has ever been conceived or executed on television. It represents an unprecedented collaboration of ABC News and Public Affairs, ABC Sports and ABC Programming, involving hundreds of people,

South African nightclub and concert song star Miriam Makeba, seen here with Africa Project Executive Producer James Fleming, has been signed to perform—in a special concert in Nairobi, Kenya—for ABC's massive Africa Project, a 3½-hour color presentation on the ABC Television Network during one entire evening this spring. Miss Makeba's portion of the program will be produced and staged by Leon Gluckman, who devised and directed the three-continent musical hit, "Wait a Minim!"

experts and authorities, and combining new techniques for an immediacy and personal involvement unequalled by any other medium."

The show will concern:

"The societies of animals and men, of ritual and law; the life of its peoples, from the thriving urban centers to remote tribal areas; the complexity of its governments, new in emerging nations, ancient in tribal lore; the meaning of its tensions, whether warfare on the Sudanese frontier, on the Kenyan-Somalia border, or in the Congo. A profile of its leaders — its Kenyatta, its Mboya, its Nyerere.

"A glorying in its spectacle: its Kilimanjaro, its Sahara and Timbuktu. Africa — as it is today. And as it was — the turbulent history that puts today in perspective.

"Its culture. From the sophistication of a modern Nigerian playwright to the primitive fury of a Masai Festival."

"Its religions. Its politics. Its sports. From a fox hunt and horse race in Kenya to an Olympic long-distance runner in Ethiopia."

That should give a slight idea of what to expect, though how it will be presented is just so much flowery boasting so far. Don't think Jingo is a pessimist, but . . . he does recall the claims made by the network for "Stage 67" — and that's been an up-and-down affair. But not to prejudice, Jingo will allow the network to continue:

"'Africa' is more than just the telecast itself. It also marks a new dimension in creative journalism. For the first time, the myriad communications media will be integrated, linking television with magazines, newspapers, records, radio, book publishing and schools and institutions, a 'joint journalism' aimed at greater understanding of the people of the world.

"It is a massive project. Both as entertainment and as education is defies category. But from the first word of its Prologue, through three distinctive and spellbinding acts, it promises to be a provocative and vital experience."

Good luck.

'Dragnet' Makes Comeback

Webb Has New Partner

BY EDGAR PENTON

If the word "Dragnet" fails to stir nostalgic memories, you just weren't "with" the radio world back in '49, when NBC first aired the now-legendary show.

Nor were you "with" television, in 1952, when "Dragnet" became THE video show of its day.

This oversight can now be corrected, for the show with the flavor of police procedure steeped deep into every scene is back on home screens Thursday evenings, 8:30-9 p.m., NBC, as "Dragnet 1967."

And, at the helm again is its central figure, Jack Webb, as star, director, and producer. To put the facts straight, ma'am Universal Television, Mark VII Ltd., and the NBC net are co-producers.

To return to nostalgia from '52 to '59, the faces of Jack Webb and Ben Alexander became, through their characterizations of Sgt. Joe Friday and sidekick Frank Smith, the video embodiment of law and order. The theme music — Dum-de-dum-dum — was heard everywhere, and Badge 714 became, perhaps, the best-known symbol in the annals of police history.

The show was parodied and copied, but there was only one "Dragnet." In 1959 it went off the tube simply because Webb, 10 years with one show, wanted to move on to new challenges.

His present challenge to introduce "Dragnet" to a vast, new audience on the home-screen side of the picture circuit. Little has been changed in the show's basic format, according to Webb. It can be said that this is the first dramatic television series to be reprised intact. As Webb puts it, "It's Sergeant Friday, through and through."

"Dragnet 1967" does, however, have a new face, and a good one. Veteran actor Harry Morgan, well-known for his series roles in "Pete and Gladys," "December Bride" and "The Richard Boone Show," joins Webb as Friday's new sidekick, officer Bill Gannon. (Ben Alexander, by the time the new series was casting, had joined the ranks of "The Felony Squad.")

But Morgan, Webb says, is ideal for his show. A formidable talent, Morgan is equally adept at playing either heavy or light drama, as the occasion demands.

"The one aspect of the show that is different," Webb says, "is that today, Friday and Gannon are facing some new situations which didn't prevail when the old series was on."

He speaks of such ultramodern situations as LSD in the hands of teen-agers, a Supreme Court ruling concerning advising suspects of their rights at the time of arrest, and an apparently growing disrespect for law and those who would uphold it.

"These attitudes, devices and problems," Webb says, "will all be treated in the new show. Without taking sides, we're going to show them all, head-on. There's a tremendous amount to say about the world we're living in today. The new series is going to unfold a number of such things."

Webb says there have been some "changes around headquarters since I was last there. They have computers which can run a suspect list in a matter of minutes, where it used to take long, back-breaking hours. And there's a new breed of 'cop' on the job today — the young policeman. He's better educated, better trained and, from what I've seen, is doing the job better than ever. We're going to reflect him in the series."

"Of course," Webb states, "there hasn't really been much change in the basic concept of police work. It's still the hard-working police detective, putting in long hours of legwork, following up threads of possible evidence, that accounts for bringing in a suspect. It is basically this process that 'Dragnet 1967' dwells upon most heavily. We did it in the original because it reflected the truth; we'll do it new because it still reflects the truth."

Webb has again been granted the full co-operation of the Los Angeles Police Department, in production of the series.

Webb does more than have the department's public information division read his scripts and make technical changes; he has insisted that they suggest stories and make major suggestions concerning every plot he deals with. "If you're going to do a series such as this, with a nearly documentary approach," Webb says, "you might just as well go the whole route so far as accuracy's concerned."

To insure accuracy during production, a police technical adviser is present during the shooting of each episode. "At the height of the original series," he grins, "writer Dick Breen and I had become so thoroughly aware of police procedure that occasionally we'd make corrections that the technical adviser himself wouldn't catch. But I still want him on board — he can save you a lot of misery."

Webb doesn't know today just how the new series will weather. "There are a lot of TV-watching kids today who don't remember the old show. We've got a whole new segment of our total audience to 'break in' to the 'Dragnet' concept. Furthermore, competition's different today. We're competing with late-vintage, well-produced movies on an opposite network. We never did that before."

But generally, the dynamically energetic producer-director-star is optimistic. "If it's true that the show had a certain magnetism to it before, then it's going to have more of it now."

"The timing is right, too. I think that, while some factions of our society are out to downgrade law enforcement, there are others who believe, more than ever, that it must be supported. This, I think, works in our favor. They'll tend to align with a project such as this one, which supports law and order."

How does Webb feel personally about doing "Dragnet" again? "It's great. I've been elsewhere for the past seven years, doing other things, but I must confess that every now and then during that time I'd find myself missing it."

New Partner Harry Morgan Lends a Helping Pen

Lauren's Career Took Turn

BY CYNTHIA LOWRY

NEW YORK (AP) — Lauren Bacall was a film star who, like it or not — and she didn't — spent most of her Hollywood years playing the same basic character, a sexy feline type with a patented smouldering look. The years passed, 21 of them to be exact, until December 1965, when Lauren Bacall was suddenly the hit of Broadway in "Cactus Flower." She plays the part of a prim nurse in a dentist's office indulging the maddest sort of broad comedy. Miss Bacall's career was off on a galloping new start.

Thursday night television will see her in still another medium when she appears on ABC's "The Light Fantastic, or How to Tell Your Past, Present and Maybe Your Future through Social Dancing."

Lauren Bacall has done little television over the years, but this program is a sort of sneaky audition.

"I want to do a musical," the actress said. "Maybe this program will convince the right people that I can do one. Anyway, I feel I can. I've danced since I was a child and I've been taking singing lessons for the past 2½ years. And I've proved in 'Cactus Flower' that I can do comedy."

The TV program with the tortured title was written by Arthur Laurents, whose credits include "West Side Story" and "Gypsy," so presumably Miss Bacall's very public bid for attention is in competent hands. She is very serious about it — as would be any performer who only recently was able to break out of a Hollywood casting prison.

Lauren — originally Betty — Bacall emerged from a stage-struck New York youngster to be a young actress with a tiny part in a Broadway flop. Spotted by a fashion magazine editor, she became a popular model. A magazine cover picture attracted film producer Howard Hawks, who signed her to play Humphrey Bogart's leading lady in "To Have and Have Not." She was a smash — and it was the beginning of a new life and a legend.

A year after the film was released she married Bogart after a furiously publicized romance. Already she was stuck in the sultry mold characterized by three famous lines in her first film: "If you want anything, all you have to do is whistle. You know how to whistle, don't you? You just put your lips together and blow."

That movie and others rather like it — most of them costarring with Bogart — are still much around television on the early and late shows.

"I guess I have not done much about television," she said. "I did do 'The Petrified Forest' with Bogie — that was live and very interesting. And later I did 'Blythe Spirit' with Noel Coward."

At Bogart's death in 1957, her life was stalled at dead center. She left Hollywood and lived abroad with her two children for almost a year. Returning to New York she played in a show that only briefly survived dismal reviews. Then in 1961 she married Jason Robards Jr., an established stage actor, and they have a son, Sam.

Although she spent many an hour at cocktail parties trying to convince assorted producer friends she could handle comedy, David Merrick's offer to star in "Cactus Flower" came as a surprise. She grabbed it.

Miss Bacall, still breathless from strenuous on-stage activity, relaxed in her dressing room and talked about the effect the play had had upon her life. The comedy, running more than a year, had just played a matinee to a sold-out house.

"This thing has done something marvelous for me," she said. "Most important, of course, it got me out of that movie category. They always put you in categories in Hollywood. They could never think of me in connection with comedy in Hollywood — and certainly never a musical."

Although someone occasionally came up with the idea for a TV series, Miss Bacall never considered it seriously.

"I'm not — and have never been — prepared to give up three years of my life to that," she said. "I don't think I could do high caliber work year in and year out — in case the show was a success. And if it was bad, it would be very hard to become reconciled to garbage even if the public eats it up. I think it would be awful to be stuck in something that you hoped nobody you knew would watch."

The slim handsome woman, who looks at least 10 years younger than her 42, said that she was not surprised at her success playing comedy — "I knew it always" — but the fact that other people recognized it had accomplished a miracle.

"It was terrible to think that if you wanted to work you would have to continue doing one thing for the rest of your career," she said. "Suddenly that is all changed. And now all the outlets are here — the stage, films and television."

She is amused at the talk of her comeback.

"It is my second comeback," she said. "The first one was when I was 24."

That was after she had bought out her contract with Warner Brothers when she had revolted against so many bad pictures that she made a studio record by going on suspension 12 times — one more than Bogart.

Laurents, an old friend, asked her to do the ABC show just at a time when she knew she could handle it.

"It would have been impossible for most of the first year of 'Cactus Flower,'" she said. "During the first six months there were all the publicity things besides doing the show, and then came the summer, which is rotten for performers with all the heat. In a play like ours, the physical demands are enormous. I'd never have dared take on an extra job in television until I knew how I was situated."

"Actually, it worked out well. We rehearsed for two weeks in the afternoons. Then we taped for two full days. There are a couple of things we might have done a bit better with more time, but I am pretty happy."

She lit a cigarette and looked worried.

"I certainly hope it is a good show. It means such a lot to me."

Havana Paper Raps Excessive Electricity Use

Cuban News Media
Seeks to Lower Power Consumption

By ISSAC M. FLORES
HAVANA (AP)—Havana's satirical weekly Palante reports that one of its photographers received third-degree burns while working on a busy thoroughfare one night. He was taking pictures of the excessive use of electric lights to illuminate department stores.

"Some of these stores look like they're having a fire sale on electricity," Palante said with characteristic exaggeration.

"For instance, we have seen the display windows of a store using seven neon bulbs 1½ yards long to illuminate one shirt and a bottle of perfume—at 3 o'clock in the morning.

The weekly is among Cuban news media seeking to reduce use of electricity.

Soviet petroleum runs the power plants. lthough two new thermoelectric systems went into operation recently, the power production situation seems to be getting worse instead of better.

Old Plants
Many of the plants are old and break down easily. Most require parts from "the capitalist sphere," as Cuban officials put it.

The two new systems, built with the aid of Soviet technicians and expected to produce 50,000 kilowatts each, are not operating at full capacity yet.
Frequent breakdowns and the shutdown of plants for repairs result in almost nightly blackouts in areas of this city of 1½ million and in interior towns.

The save-power campaign's symbol is a butterfly with the slogan "It has a short life span," meaning that electric lightbulbs and appliances such as television sets, radios, irons, toasters should be turned off when not in use.

In an issue devoted to the problem, Palante made some biting comments and provided facts and figures "for those bureaucrats who delight in them."
—"We know of commercial enterprises that during capitalism's reign spent a predetermined amount of money on electricity and now, administered under a Socialist system, they use seven times the amount they did then."

—Production of a kilowatt costs around 2.35 cents and requires about 15 ounces of petroleum hauled thousands of miles. Thirty 100-watt bulbs burning 10 hours a day each require the consumption of 4.7 metric tons of petroleum per year.

Glaring Lights
—Many Cubans wear dark glasses to work because of the glaring lights at their places of employment.

—Many business enterprises have a rule that the first person to arrive in the morning should turn out the lights left on the night before.

It is said that a light bulb consumes more sugar by operating three hours a day in Cuba than three fat ladies eating cotton candy steadily for a year and a half. Sugar makes up more than 80 per cent of Cuban exports and is the chief source of foreign exchange.

Light bulbs, imported from China and more recently from the Soviet Union, are rationed.
A family is entitled to two each time bulbs come into neighborhood stores; this may be every six or eight months.

Officials are thinking of putting some industries, shops and businesses on a midnight to 8 a.m. schedule so as to lessen the peak consumption load which occurs from 6 to 10 p.m.

Edward White Fellowship Established

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) —
A fellowship in honor of astronaut Edward H. White II, killed in an Apollo spaceship fire last Friday, was established today at the University of Michigan.

White, who received a masters degree in astronautical and aeronautical engineering from the university, died in the fire with astronauts Virgil I. Grissom and Roger B. Chaffee.

Earlier this week, Purdue University in Indiana established scholarships for the children of Grissom and Chaffee, both Purdue graduates.

The fellowship will provide funds for students doing graduate work in aerospace engineering.

White and fellow astronaut
James A. McDivitt were both awarded doctorates in astro-nautical science, a newly created honorary degree, by the university after their Gemini 4 flight in which White became the first American to walk in space.

Controversial 'MacBird!' Opens

Wednesday at Village Gate, NYC

BY WILLIAM WOLF

NEW YORK — One of the most controversial plays in years is about to burst upon the New York scene, but the producers of "MacBird!" are acting as nonchalant as if they were doing "Mary Poppins."

A theater refused to book the show. So they got another place. A printer refused to publish the program. They made other arrangements.

"MacBird!", a biting, cynically comic parody written in a Shakespearean style and pitting the Johnsons against the Kennedys in a power struggle, opens Wednesday at the Village Gate, 815 Thompson St.

"I suspect there will be private harassment, such as pickets," said co-producer David Dretzin, but he expected no official trouble. "Anything private I don't really regard as harassment. We've had lawyers read the play and they don't think anything is actionable."

Using a "Macbeth" theme, the play written by Barbara Garson has the following among its characters, all readily identifiable.

MacBird is obviously President Johnson. Lady MacBird spoofs the First Lady. Ken O'Dunc is assassinated. His brother Robert then leads a fight against MacBird. Teddy is portrayed as a numskull. The Egg of Head is patently the late Adlai Stevenson. There are also such characters as the Wayne of Morse, the Earl of Warren, Lord MacNamara, and modern counterparts to the three Shakespearean witches.

The play now being staged has been published, with 105,000 copies in print under the "Grassy Knoll Press" label, and now Grove Press is issuing another edition plus a recording. In England, it is being published by Penguin. Meanwhile, bids for production rights have come from England, France, Scandinavia, Germany and Italy.

"We're not selling any rights until we open," stressed Dretzin, an attorney, and his co-producer, Julia Curtis, who hails from England and worked in a publishing firm here. Meanwhile, their box office has been taking in a heavy advance for off-Broadway, and the previews, which began Jan. 19, have been selling out.

The word has spread that this is a conversation piece to see. Conversely, those who resent the satire contained in the play are debating its taste.

MacBird is portrayed by Stacy Keach, a former member of the Lincoln Center Repertory company, in a burlesqued manner, and although he doesn't resemble the President, he imitates his voice. Actor William Devane bears a remarkable resemblance to Robert Kennedy.

Nothing is sacred in terms of subjects lampooned. Characters are depicted as totally cynical, power-hungry, and filled with duplicity. But it is done with the stress on laughter, not on political argument.

The printer became angry because he interpreted the play as saying President and Mrs. Johnson plotted the Kennedy assassination. Actually, this is never stated, but the play depicts them as conniving a trip to MacBird territory to "ride in rich regalia through the throng, and feel the warmth and frenzy of their love."

Miss Curtis countered that the play was not meant literally, and argued: "Lord Stevenson, the Egg of Head, is found killed by a poisoned dart, but people don't take that seriously."

In any event, after the printer refused to do the program, Grove Press agreed to do it without charge. Miss Curtis, seated upstairs while a rehearsal was under way, disclosed that the Theater de Lys had turned down the play. So had the 81st Street Theater, because it is leased by RKO General Corp., which did not approve the script. However, after a new leasing arrangement, the 81st Street Theater was willing.

But it was too late. The producers had already booked the Village Gate, usually a night club.

"There is very little in the way of satire in the theater in New York," asserted Miss Curtis. "People have raised questions of taste and say it's offensive. But there is a lot of theater that is terribly, terribly dull and probably in very good taste." She added with a smile that she'd be happy to send invitations to those lampooned.

The play came to her attention through a neighbor, Roy Levine, who is directing. He is a friend of author Barbara Garson, 25 years old and a former student at the University of California in Berkeley.

"It was easy raising the $30,000 we needed," Miss Curtis said. "We have 51 investors of record, but in some instances people got together to buy one share."

Whatever the reaction here, the demand for foreign rights indicates that in a short time mock Johnsons and Kennedys will be fighting it out in assorted languages on stages abroad.

Any resemblance is more than coincidental. William Kennedy and President Johnson in power struggle. It Devane as Robert Ken O'Dunc battles Stacy Keach as opens Wednesday at New York City's Village Gate, "MacBird" in Shakespearean-style spoof pitting Robert normally a night club.

Lawrence's Visiting Director Likes to Start At Top

William Greene, on Loan From Guthrie, Has Background in

By MARGUERITE SCHUMANN Of Lawrence University

"I have always liked to start at the top — fortunately, it has proved practical for me," says William Greene with a disarming, lopsided smile.

Greene, who is director of the Actors Workshop for the Minnesota Theater Company at the Tyrone Guthrie Theater, is on loan to Lawrence University for its midwinter theatrical production.

"Starting at the top" for Greene has meant learning his acting at "the best school of theater in the world" — the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art in London, and now having the opportunity to establish his American reputation as a director associated with "the best repertory theater in the country."

Greene is as allergic to virtue-by-association as he is to guilt-by-association. "I dislike hearing such statements as 'I appeared with Peter Ustinov,' as if that proves something about one's own talent," he indicates.

However, the following facts of his career are indisputable:

He was one of ten Americans chosen from a field of 900 applicants for training at the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art, after an interview with Dame Margaret Webster.

He was the only American in the cast of a play given as a Royal Command Performance for Princess Margaret, and the only student to be presented to the Princess on that occasion.

He was the only American to appear at the Southwark Shakespeare Festival in Richard III and Measure for Measure.

He was named the best director of 1951 at the Royal Academy.

He went directly from school to a hit musical "Love from Judy" which ran 18 months in London's West End.

He has appeared in 19 professional-level plays, eight of them in London, one on Broadway. (At the risk of imputing virtue because he appeared with Peter Ustinov, it must be noted for the record that Greene and Ustinov were both in "Romanoff and Juliet" when it opened in London and later when it was moved to Broadway. Earl Wilson wrote in his column that it was like sending snow to an eskimo to bring an American from London to play an American part in New York.)

He has done 17 single television programs either for the BBC or ITV, and appeared in two serials — one of them an eight-part story in which he was the star. Also included among his credits are eleven BBC radio dramas, and acting as master of ceremonies for several series heard on Radio Luxembourg.

In the category of virtue-by-association go such miscellaneous facts as: his personal manager is also the manager of Laurence Olivier and Noel Coward; his movie debut was made in an Alec Guinness movie; he has been included in nightclub acts with Hermione Gingold and Kay Thompson; and his movie career has consisted of 13 films — "I had only supporting parts," he recounts. The films, all made in London, numbered such American successes as "Lolita," "I Am a Camera," "Light in the Piazza," "Anastasia," and "Dr. Strangelove."

Greene was born on a cotton plantation in southern Georgia, and decided to become a doctor "on the basis of a George Brent movie." After starting medical studies at Vanderbilt University he discovered it had been the theatrical quality of the George Brent movie rather than the doctor's life that had attracted him all along.

He shifted his ground to the University of Georgia, where he graduated in drama and "got rid of his southern accent."

Apparently there was enough honey left in his voice when he started studying in London that he and Sir Kenneth Barnes had a serious discussion about the kind of professional speech Greene wished to achieve. "I told Sir Kenneth that I didn't want an English accent — I wanted to speak the way they did on Broadway. He replied that it was ridiculous to swap a southern accent for a northern accent — that I should learn the standard King's English, which I did. Then, of course, what did my first professional role in London turn out to be? That of a southern boy! I had to become a caricature of my former self."

Greene spent a total of 14 years in London as actor, decided to take a brief stay he surveyed establishing a theater, his first experience with Guthrie in began as a then became and associated with the Actors Workshop in February. the workshop, experience, company and the ability to play first-class shows, most of them.

Negroes in Show Biz - - Do They Have It Made ?

BY GENE HANDSAKER

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Sidney Poitier won an Oscar. Bill Cosby won an Emmy. Does that mean Negroes have it made in show biz?

Says a spokesman for the NAACP: "It still looks like tokenism. As we see it, the struggle is only beginning."

Says a spokesman for the producers' association: "We are making progress and it's more than tokenism. We have a long way to go, like any other industry, but I'm proud of what we've done on the screen."

There is no doubt that a quiet revolution is under way, but it still has a long way to go. More Negroes than ever are working in front of the cameras; few indeed are working behind the cameras.

Among the unsung battles in the revolution are ones like this: A few years ago Ivan Dixon was cast as a doctor in a television version of "Arrowsmith." The first script required him, as he puts it, to place "this wooly head" on Diane Baker's white chest to see if she was alive.

"In the rehearsal, the sponsor's booth shook," says Dixon. "Diane didn't object — performers are pretty open-minded. But there was a conference and it was decided that I should call Farley Granger to listen for her heartbeat."

"On the air I put my head on her chest anyway. There were a lot of angry people that night."

There were predictions, indeed, that Dixon, a Harlem-born graduate of North Carolina College and the New York stage, would never work in Hollywood again. But Dixon persisted as stand-in, walk-on and stunt man, and now is seen weekly, for a second season, in CBS's "Hogan's Heroes."

Not so long ago Negroes were the invisible Americans in most screen presentations, except as servants, buffoons or catalysts of racial conflict.

Today Negroes get roles that might go to any white performer. In fact, some say a new stereotype has developed: the well-groomed Negro, mannerly, devoid of accent, a model citizen wearing an Ivy League suit and carrying a briefcase.

"Just so they can say: 'We have a Negro on the show this week,'" one Negro actor said sarcastically.

A white producer who has used Negroes as heavies added: "When I see a Negro on a show I don't automatically say, 'he's a nice guy.' That becomes a cliché — inverse prejudice."

It is easy to fault the absence of a massive infusion of Negro entertainment talent. But it also is easy to point to many who have made good, and others who are likely to.

Bill Cosby, onetime Philadelphia shoeshine boy and Temple University athlete, rose to a $30,000-a-week nightclub comedian telling nonracial jokes based on youthful experiences. Last May he received a television Emmy and a standing ovation for his acting as Robert Culp's costar in the TV drama, "I Spy." In December the Hollywood Women's Press Club honored him and Phyllis Diller with its mythical "Golden Apple" awards as the year's most cooperative performers.

Says Cosby: "This is not said with bitterness or meant to be smartaleck. Too many times I've seen Negroes asked questions about their advancement and it's come out as if they don't appreciate what's happened."

"But we could speed up this thing. More could be done. I think it's been proven that white people can identify with a Negro star who's just trying to reach his goal. I want to see more love scenes between Negroes."

"I think the industry is cheating itself out of some excellent performances by keeping Negroes out. Agencies and studios don't think about hiring a Negro unless the script says, 'John is a Negro, tall and lean.'"

Then there's Greg Morris, Cleveland-born ex-soldier educated at Ohio State and the University of Iowa. Onetime headwaiter in a private club, a professional actor for five years, he's now seen regularly in television's "Mission Impossible."

His view differs in part from Cosby's: "I would say 50 per cent of my roles were not written as 'Joe Blow, a young Negro.'"

"This role was not written for a Negro. I competed with 25 or 30 actors, only five of whom were Negroes. There are producers — but not enough — who disregard color in creating a role."

Harri Rhodes, a Cincinnati native and Marine ex-sergeant who carries bayonet scars on both forearms from Korea, plays the white doctor's assistant on television's "Daktari."

Says Rhodes: "There is progress, but many of us get impatient with the pace. We still have only one movie star — Sidney Poitier. There is no female Negro movie star. Those of us who are working regularly, as far as I can determine, still are not portraying well-rounded human beings."

Towering Raymond St. Jacques plays heavies. So does rotund comedian-actor Godfrey Cambridge, who says: "The fact that I'm able to play a gangster in a movie nowadays is a sign of our growing sophistication toward racial matters."

Credit for one of the biggest boosts to the Negro cause in Hollywood is given by members of both races to Sheldon Leonard, producer of the Andy Griffith, Gomer Pyle, Dick Van Dyke and "Hey, Landlord!" shows. Leonard tells how he came to costar a Negro on the trail blazing "I Spy":

"In the early years of the Danny Thomas show, which I produced and directed, there was a scene in which Thomas put his arm around his Negro maid, Amanda Randolph. We got vituperative, insane mail."

"Then we did a show all about Amanda and her problems and expected more adverse mail than we

"The second one came on a Dick Van Dyke show. Dick and Mary Moore have a baby. of a similarity in name, think the hospital had them the wrong baby. in a frenzy. The other comes to their house, a Negro. Their frenzy no reason."

"The network, the agency and the agency were we'd be making a joke expense of skin color made a deal: We'd episode and if it was I'd reshoot it at my expense."

"We filmed it before an audience of 300 people in a street. They liked it. The show was on the air. Approving mail was mounds, the impact massive, it showed passed the critical point."

"With that knowledge, I approached the network about Cosby, thrown off balance by there was no opposition ever."

Despite progress, says, many fears and tensions remain. One long complaint is of "white" craft unions.

The unions' international representative says, think there has been against Negroes." Int he says, is "slow but will come to pass."

Negroes are getting more jobs in show business than previously—but progress is slow. At upper right, Ivan Dixon appears as a regular with series star Bob Crane on "Hogan's Heroes." Dixon also starred in "The Final War of Olly Winter" last Sunday, as the premiere of CBS' original drama playhouse. In the car scene is comedian Godfrey Cambridge, who appears in the movie, "The Busy Body." The man in the white cap is Reuben Watt, assistant director of "Batman" on TV.

Hit Film Cost Only $50,000

DANA POINT, Calif. (AP) — Recently a film called "The Endless Summer" placed No. 10 on Variety's weekly list of the country's money-making films, which included "The Sound of Music," "Doctor Zhivago" and "The Bible."

Those epics cost more than $10 million apiece. "The Endless Summer" ran up a total bill of $50,000.

Dubbed "Fellini of the Foam" — New York Times — and "Bergman of the Boards" — Time magazine — Bruce Brown has accomplished what appeared to be impossible. He took his simple, beautifully filmed movie to New York and achieved reviews that many a producer of epics would trade his yacht for.

After eight months "The Endless Summer" is still playing at the Kips Bay Theater in Manhattan, and it has broken records in other key cities. It is up for an Oscar as best documentary of 1966.

I dropped down to this sunswept community 70 miles south of Hollywood to find out if success had spoiled Bruce Brown. It hasn't. He remains the same independent soul as when he was showing his surfing films in high school auditoriums of Southern California.

"Yeah, there has been a lot of action since 'The Endless Summer' was accepted by a mass audience," he conceded. "Producers call me with ideas for movies, all of which I don't want to do."

"The other day I was up at MGM talking to Ivan Tors (producer of 'Flipper,' 'Daktari,' etc.). He told me if I wanted to make a television series on surfing he could sell it in a minute. I told him, 'I don't want to make a television series about surfing.'

"What I want to make is a movie about commercial fishing for swordfish. But every time I mention it to people in the movie business, their eyes glaze and they say, 'Nobody wants to see a film about fishing.'"

For a couple of years, the same persons were telling Brown, "Nobody wants to see a film about surfing." But Brown figured there would be general interest in his movie, which concerned the around-the-world search of two young surfers for the perfect wave. He hocked everything he owned to finance the New York opening, and the gamble paid off.

"If it hadn't, I would have lost everything — my house, my business, the whole works," he says. "I was up to my eyeballs in debt."

Everything is coming up roses now. He can afford a 40-foot commercial fishing boat and an ocean runabout, four motorcycles and a Jeep to prowl the nearby hills. A slim man of 29 with sun-bleached hair and a constant tan, he prefers the ocean or mountain life to work in smog-bound Hollywood. He lives in a cliff-hanging house with his pretty wife and three children.

"Me work in a studio?" he muses. "Not a chance."

James Garner and Suzanne Pleshette are pictured in a scene from MGM's "Mister Buddwing," the current attraction at the Appleton Theater. She is one of four women who play a fateful part in Garner's life. The others are Jean Simmons, Angela Lansbury and Katharine Ross. Garner, in the title role of the film based on an Evan Hunter novel, plays a man in a state of shock, who undergoes a desperate search for his identity. Screenplay is by Dale Wasserman, direction by Delbert Mann and it was produced by Douglas Laurence and Mann.

Martin Dislikes the Retakes; Battles Man With Two Last Names

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The assistant director opened the door cautiously and said, "Dean, could you come up and look at the scene through the movieola and then do a runthrough?"

Dean Martin viewed the suggestion with scorn in his sleepy eyes. He was seated in the basement of an abandoned department store that was being used as a location for his latest film, "Band of Gold." Director Fielder Cook was asking Martin to look at previous film on a movie viewer so he could match the action in the scene that was to be shot that afternoon.

"He asking me to climb those stairs just to look at a movieola?" Martin said indignantly. "Forget it. You tell him when he's ready to shoot the scene I'll be there and I'll know my lines."

The assistant retreated.

This was the latest episode on a battle of nerves that has been the talk of Hollywood. The trade had buzzed with reports Martin and Cook were not seeing eye to eye. In fact, the star had not appeared for work one day and the company had to be dismissed.

"Yeah, I had to lay down the law," Martin admitted with his customary casualness. "This guy with the two last names, he was shooting eight or nine takes of every scene. He had a great big three-million-dollar toy and he was having fun with it."

"Trouble is, he was playing with my money, 'cause the more money that's spent, the less profit I get. But more than that, it ain't my style. How can you tell a joke eight-nine times? It's bound to get stale."

"Finally I told him, 'What the hell you doing with all these takes?' He said he might find something he didn't expect. I told him, 'Well, you find it in the first or second take, because that's all you're going to get.'"

Martin declared the impasse was settled when Columbia production boss Mike Frankovich instructed the director: "Shoot it his (Martin's) way."

Another assistant director appeared and asked if Martin would now come upstairs for filming. No mention was made of viewing the previous scene.

"Okay," the actor conceded, and he went to the main floor, which was filled with extras. His rehearsal was letter perfect.

As the final preparations were being made for the shot, director Cook minimized their differences.

"If one-tenth of what was printed in the trade papers had really happened," he told a visitor, "it would have been akin to the 1917 revolution."

"In truth it has been like a wonderful eight-week honeymoon, followed by one week of discord. It happens in any marriage. I have great respect for Dean; he is the best high-comedian in the business."

The set was ready. The camera recorded the scene twice. "Print!" said Cook, indicating he was satisfied.

"That's the way ole Dino works," said Martin, retiring to his haven in the basement.

This is Bruce Brown, a man of 29 who produced a movie, "The Endless Summer," for a total figure of $50,000. Brown was in debt "up to my eyeballs" when the picture was finished. Things are different now.

The movie recently placed number 10 on Variety's weekly list of money makers, including such epics as "The Sound of Music" and "The Bible." They cost more than $10 million apiece. (AP Wirephoto)

NEW IMPROVED (1961) JAMES EARL RAY

Carryin' On Pop-Jazz

BY DAVID F. WAGNER
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

Carryin' On! (Lou Rawls, Capitol).

What popular music continually wants and needs is something (or someone) wise, worldly and warm — today we call it soul. Though the term came from R&B, it was quickly recognized in all related forms; especially among jazz singers who could claim a colored church choir background.

Since Rawls fills these requirements, he became the darling of the sophisticated hippies with his remarkable "Live" album. He later furthered his cause with the less remarkable LP, "Soulful," and the hit 45, "Love Is a Hurtin' Thing."

This time out, his product can be only highly recommended. It does not have the monologues (which are superfluous in a non-club setting), but it does have several powerhouses — "You're Gonna Hear from Me," "The Life That I Lead" (flip of new single), "Walking Proud," "You Can Bring Me All Your Heartaches." The last one has a big band backing, while most other numbers revolve around a small combo.

The Music of Walt Disney (Various Artists, Buena Vista).

In memory of Mr. Disney, his recording company assembled original music from 15 of his movies. The earliest films — "Snow White," "Pinocchio," "Bambi," "Fantasia," "Song of the South," "Cinderella," "Peter Pan," Nancy — Naturally (Nancy Wilson, Capitol).

In an earthy, tell-it-like-it-is style, Nancy sings of romance ("In the Dark") and heart-break ("Ten Years of Tears"). She is largely improvisational on "Since I Fell for You" — delicately wailing, humming, catching the sweet agony with artful symbolic expressions. "Alright, Okay, "Sleeping Beauty" — provide the most interest and best music. "Chim Chim Cheree" from "Mary Poppins" is the highlight of the newer music. Proceeds from the LP sales will be donated to the California Institute of the Arts.

You Win" has been overdone and she does not give it much that is new, but "I Wish I Didn't Love You So" and "Smack Dab in the Middle" are substantial songs at any time, and here are of more interest than being just remembered moldy oldies.

Takin' Care of Business (Gene Russell Trio, Dot).

A popular Los Angeles jazz pianist, Russell was greeted for this "live" recording at Memory Lane (an L. A. club) by "a burst of enthusiastic applause," requested by the nervous M. C. Russell's version of "Norwegian Wood," his opener, captures the listener right away (the audience, though, chattered through several tunes before shutting up). The bassist (all right, cats, who is he?) is given a chance to imitate a sitar in creating one of the most diverting performances of "Wood" I have heard. His own originality in the debut LP is evidenced in the self-composed "Tenaya" and the title track.

Warm (Lettermen, Capitol).

This is not bad at all; especially side two, which has "For No One" and "Here, There and Everywhere" (Beatle songs from "Revolver"), showing they have more ability than they are wont to employ. "Our Winter Love," "Don't Blame It on Me" and "Chanson d'Amour" exhibit the matured Lettermen. All the harsh edges are softened and they produce a joyous sound that is quite satisfying.

Walking Happy (Original Broadway Cast, Capitol).

I must admit to amazement upon hearing this score. Several months ago, I heard Sammy Kahn and Jimmy Van Heusen preview some of the show's songs; they appeared to be discouragingly boring. But star Norman Wisdom — who is big in England — and supporting actors Louise Troy and George Rose inject life into the music. I think this show will be extremely dull in the hands of amateur community theaters in years to come.

More of the Monkees (Colgems).

The DJs are all on "She" — they want it to be the new single; but it is weak lyrically. A much stronger contender, I think, is "Look Out (Here Comes Tomorrow)," by Neil Diamond — author of "I'm a Believer" (included, as is "Steppin' Stone"). Another goodie is Neil Sedaka's "When Love Comes Knockin' (At Your Door)." "Auntie Grizelda" features Peter Tork singing flat and improvising (sort of). "Mary, Mary," written and produced by Mike Nesmith, is very basic folk-rock, as is "The Kind of Girl I Could Love." "Sometime in the Morning," a Goffin-King song, is perhaps the best track: it is the most sincere and has the best lyrics.

Album Potpourri:

It's Only the Good Times (Wayne Newton, Capitol). "Games That Lovers Play," "My Special Angel" and "That Funny Feeling" are Newton at his best, but "You've Let Yourself Go," by Charles Aznavour, one of France's Cliche Experts, is infuriating, humorous aspects of the recital aside.

Grand Prix (Motion Picture Soundtrack, MGM). Another Maurice Jarre score, "Prix" follows his "Doctor Zhivago" music. In too many spots, the melodies seem on the verge of bursting into "Lara's Theme" ("Somewhere My Love"). Keep an eye on "Sarti's Love Theme" and "Scott's Theme." They are likely to recur.

All the Good That's Happening (Leaves, Capitol). Last summer, the Leaves had a hit ("Hey Joe"). We all know what happens to Leaves in the autumn, don't we.

Love Me, Please Love Me (Jimmie Rodgers, Dot). Except for the title song, these are re-recordings of old Rodgers hits that Roulette still won't let go. Surprisingly, the reprises are well done.

Music — It's Happening Now (David McCallum, Capitol). David conducts his third album of recent hits, and includes one of his own.

Man With a Load of Mischief (Original Cast, Kapp). This musical is one of the reasons off-Broadway's season is doing better than usual.

25 Greatest Instrumental Hits (Challengers, GNP Crescendo 2-Record Set). This rock quartet, with lots and lots of support, plays hits ranging from 1956 ("Raunchy") to this year ("Born Free"). Good variety and consistent performance.

This Is Ernie Andrews (Dot). Ernie sounds like an apprentice Lou Rawls.

Hugh Masekela's Next Album (MGM). I'm waiting for Hugh Masekela's last album.

Mace -- New Budget LP Line

BY JACK RUDOLPH
MACE RECORDS

Mace is a relatively new label in the low-cost, re-issue and import field recently invaded by the major record companies. These are the first releases I've heard and they're good — imaginative selections well performed in bright, fresh sound. The discs seem thinner and lighter than standard LPs but well engineered, with quiet surfaces, good presence and tonal balance.

Jacket notes are excellent. The jackets, apparently printed overseas where the English of type-setters and proof readers is shaky, are well designed but carelessly executed. Well, for $1.89 you can't have everything, and it's what is inside the jacket that counts.

VOCAL-RENAISSANCE

Madrigals and Chorus by Di Lasso, Gesualdo, Marenzio, Praetorius, etc. Walter von der Vogelweide Chamber Choir of Innsbruck. Mace MCS 9062 (Mono MCM 9062).

I never heard of this chorus but it's a good one with a delicate balance and clean transparency of vocal lines. However, its singing is overly careful and studied, to the point where everything sounds much alike.

VIOLA D'AMORE

The Virtuouse Viola d'Amore: Haydn, Stamitz, Ariosti, Hindemith, etc. Chamber group. Mace MSC 9049 (Mono MCM 9049).

Here is an interesting novelty featuring an instrument long relegated to obscurity. The players are expert and they cover a wide range of styles with a full, warm but somewhat nasal sound.

MOZART-BEETHOVEN SCHUBERT

Six German Dances, K 509 (Mozart), 12 German Dances (Beethoven), Five German Dances (Schubert). Northern Sinfonia Orchestra, Boris Brott conducting. Mace MSC 9070 (Mono MCM 9070).

Another unknown ensemble and conductor (wonder who they really are) give some very lively readings featuring notable brass work in the Beethoven. No blockbusters but an interesting comparison of the styles of three geniuses whose careers overlapped.

BACH-MOZART-SCHUBERT-CHOPIN

Italian Concerto in F Major (J. S. Bach), Sonata in C Major K 545 (Mozart) Scherzo No. 2 in D-Flat (Schubert), Andante Spianato and Grande Polonaise in E-Flat (Chopin). Friedrich Gulda, pianist. Mace MCS 9060 (Mono MCM 9060).

The prize of the lot and superb recording on any label. Fulda plays with delicate balance and a touch that can be either a blow or a caress, although he prefers the latter. Phrasing is impeccable, a his tone is not only bright and resonant but clean and transparent. Superlative artistry throughout.

CHAUSSON

Concerto in D Major 1 Violin, Piano and String Quartet. Ralph Votapek, pianist, John Corigliano, violinist, w International Soloists Quartet. Mace MSC 9074 (Mono MCM 9074).

Votapek is the Milwaukee winner of the first V. Cliburn competition and was known to Peninsula Music Festival faithful, while Corigliano is concertmaster of the New York Philharmonic; the quartet is unidentified. A unique work, possibly the only one of its kind, the concerto is lovely, with a lyrical slow movement. Corigliano is outstanding but Votapek is a heavy-handed.

J. S. BACH
Sonata No. 2 in A Minor and Partita No. 2 in D Minor unaccompanied Violin. Hym Bress, violinist. Mace M 9057 (Mono MCM 9057).

Part of a complete set of the sonatas and partitas for violin, this one is of major interest because it contains the great Chaconne. Bress is an expert fiddler and plays pieces with suave style, tone and flawless accuracy.

New Bag for Jack, Shirley

BY WILLIAM GLOVER
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK (AP)—The sound of music is temporarily out for Shirley Jones and Jack Cassidy; rascally suspense is in.

This is a matter of some importance to the husband-wife team best known until now for vocal romancing on stage and records.

"We have good musical chemistry together," he says, "but we got tired of suitcases and the play-it-safe dangers of Broadway."

"This," notes his winsome helpmate, "is the first straight role I've ever played."

The affair at hand is "Wait Until Dark," a 46-week Broadway success which in May will be on the road via Cincinnati, Milwaukee, Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Denver and Baltimore.

The assignment isn't eliminating luggage from their lives, but at least they'll be repacking together.

"For the last three years," Cassidy says, pointing out the difference, "I've been working in New York, Shirley was in night clubs or on coast television and one of us was always having to travel to see the other."

A six-week California stand in the middle of this tour will also give them a reunion with their three lads—Shaun, 8, Patrick, 5, and Ryan, a yearling. Mid-May should also bring a decision about two proposed CBS TV series—each is in one-on which pilot options are pending.

Besides providing a welcome change from their usual singalong theater fare, preparation for "Wait Until Dark" turned up some educational aspects, especially for Miss Jones.

Her role is that of a blind damsel whose home is invaded by a diabolical trio, led by Cassidy, a would-be strangler. To achieve sightless realism, she studied at the Lighthouse, a New York center for helping the blind, and conferred with Lee Remick who played the part on Broadway.

"I'm being blind in another way," she says, "dismissing the danger of copycat portrayal. 'One of the things I learned at the Lighthouse is that there is no set behavior pattern. No two blind people act alike."

"I found out something else that's very interesting—when a woman is blindfolded she always veers to the left, and a man to the right."

"Maybe," helpfully offers Cassidy, "it is like kissing—a man always turns his head in that same way to the right."

"We are always being asked about kisses in a show or movie," explains his wife as the conversation loses contact with melodrama.

"It's all a matter of timing," asserts Cassidy. "I'm never conscious of the kiss itself."

"Men are always more self-conscious in a romantic scene," she insists. "Women aren't nearly so much. But I am more relaxed with you."

"It doesn't work that way with me at all," counters her spouse. "And I was playing straight roles before Brando."

Cassidy moves away from the bus stop to tell how they avoid career friction when roles are being chosen or studied.

"We talk such things over to a degree," he asserts. "We are good audience for each other and we have respect. But we avoid getting deeply involved in each other's work."

"I always like Jack's criticism and I think he would make a marvelous director," observes Miss Jones.

"You haven't asked me if I'd hire her," Cassidy interrupts, then answers himself. "She's a fooler, the only real actress from the show business I know. When it comes to a dramatic role, she works things out by herself without telling anyone."

That performance, for example, in "Elmer Gantry" which won her a film Oscar—"I just cued her when she was studying and she figured out the character interpretation by herself."

Such mutual admiration is no backstage novelty, but a Cassidy-Jones exchange undermines the normal skepticism desirable on such occasions. In 10 years of marriage, the couple seem to have found the secret of how to succeed yet stay together.

The first time, however, that they rehearsed together for this show, Miss Jones reports he frightened her during the big scene of malevolent mayhem.

"But it gave new meaning to my role," she says.

"Actually, it was just my childhood hostilities coming out," smiles Cassidy. "I never scared you before?"

"Yes you have — when you get home late. I've been married to a villain all these years. I think all wives like a little villainy at home, though."

"You never told me that before," Cassidy has the last word. "Maybe I'll be a little more like that from now on if that's what you like."

Known as a husband-wife singing team on stage and records, Shirley Jones and Jack Cassidy are playing it straight in "Wait Until Dark," Broadway suspense hit in which they will tour until May. Shirley plays the role of a blind young woman created by Lee Remick, while Cassidy is the leader of a trio of gangsters who invade her home. They are shown in a scene from the play. (APN Photo)

It's Time for Another Wine Column; Here's Expert Way to Taste

John Torinus discusses amending the Wisconsin Constitution on his Commentary Program on Channel 11 Sunday. It's on WLUK-TV at 11 a.m. and 11 p.m.

BY JOHN TORINUS

Editor, The Post-Crescent

I haven't looked up the statistics lately, but it is obvious that the habit of wine drinking is spreading rapidly in this country. The greater varieties offered in the stocks of many area liquor stores, wine cards appearing in more and more dining spots, and more frequent articles about wines in many periodicals are offered in evidence.

When I started this column almost five years ago and wrote on this subject I was regarded as at least a snob if not a bit odd. Lately I have had a number of requests to touch on the subject again.

It is probably worth repeating some simple advice I advanced once before. A wine expert is a person who knows what wines he likes and where to procure them. This knowledge comes primarily from sampling a variety of different wines. A notebook to jot down the names of those a person likes is most helpful. The knowledge can be advanced by reading. There are a number of authoritative books on the subject available, some of them inexpensive paperbacks. And the advice and counsel of a wine dealer who knows his subject is the final asset. By that time you're hooked.

Some of the traditions which have grown up about wine drinking may appear to the novice as ostentations. In fact the fear of not doing the proper thing may actually dissuade many people from even trying a wine. But actually most of them are only common sense precautions.

You store a wine laying on its side so that the wine keeps the cork moist. If the cork dries out air enters the bottle and the wine spoils. And in addition you'll have a hell of a time pulling the cork out. So beware of buying any bottle which has stood upright in a store for any length of time.

You store a bottle with the label on top so that it is easy to read the label.

You keep wine in a dark place with an even temperature so that it will keep better. The ideal is a cellar temperature of about 50 degrees. But anything below 70 is all right.

A red wine is normally served at low room temperature of about 65 degrees, but some people like it cooler. Roses and whites should be cool but not icy, say 45 degrees.

A good wine glass has a stem, is clear, with a roundish bowl. By holding the stem you don't sully the brightness of the wine with fingerprints. It is clear so that the color of the wine comes through. And the design of the bowl allows the bouquet of the wine to concentrate at the lip of the glass.

When you are served wine in a restaurant the waiter first shows you the bottle to make sure it is the wine you ordered. He pours a small amount for the host first so that the host can taste it to make certain it is unspoiled. He fills the glasses only halfway so that the bouquet can fill the upper half of the glass.

Here's the best description of wine testing I have run across, borrowed from the most recent issue of Gourmet Magazine:

"Most people taste with their tongues, useful but not very sophisticated sensory receptors. . . But in terms of sensory sensations it can't compare with the olfactory nerves that are in the nasal cavity above the mouth. . .

"The problem is to get the fumes of the wine up into the nasal cavity without gagging. First you examine the wine, letting light stream through it. Color gives an indication of age. Bloodred wines are likely to be younger than those with a russet hue. White wines with a golden color will be older than those of lighter color.

"The wine should be swirled in the glass and sniffed. The bouquet rising from the top gives a good idea of what will follow.

"A small mouthful should then be taken and rinsed around the mouth and swallowed. This is known as 'fixing the mouth'—cleansing it of previous flavors.

"Another sip should then be taken and dangled a while on the tongue, teasing its zones of sweetness and acidity.

"Finally, take a little wine and wash it all around your mouth, gargling a little if you wish. Then breathe air slowly through your mouth and the wine that is in it. Holding this wine-laden breath down in your lungs, swallow whatever residual wine remains in your mouth. Then shut your mouth and slowly and firmly breathe the fumes warmed in your lungs out through your nose. If the wine is a great one, a symphony of tastes will blossom in your head: for the olfactory nerves, which have been caressed by this trick, respond with far greater sensitivity to the nuances of taste than the tongue. This trick is the key to accurate wine tasting.

"However, a few words of warning. It takes a little practice to taste perfectly. The first few times, one is likely to breathe or swallow out of sequence. The result is a lousy cough and a deluge of wine. But once the trick is learned, it is easy to do."

Did you know that the color of wines is not determined by the color of the grape? It depends upon whether the skins are left in the mash and for how long. White wines are pressed immediately and only the juice is allowed to ferment. In rose wines the skins are left in the juice for about 24 hours. With red wines the skins remain in for several days.

In recent reading I discovered how champagne first came into being. The Champagne district of France is at the northern extreme of the grape-growing region. Normally after grapes are picked in the fall they ferment in open casks for a number of weeks until all the sugar has broken down into alcohol and carbon dioxide. The gas escapes into the air. Then the wine is put in closed casks to mature and is later bottled.

But in the Champagne district cool weather intervenes before the fermentation process is complete, and the wine sleeps over the winter. If it is bottled during this period, it begins to ferment again in the spring in the bottle. The carbon dioxide is trapped in the bottle and in the wine, giving it its sparkling characteristic.

In cheaper champagnes this process is inspired artificially by adding a small amount of sugar and yeast after bottling.

Pope's Decision on Birth Control Critical to Overpopulation Threat

BY WILLIAM F. BUCKLEY, JR.

Mrs. Clare Booth Luce writes in the current issue of McCall's a thoughtful piece on the agonizing problem of the Catholic position on birth control. She is herself R.C. (as am I), and her analysis is therefore especially interesting to Catholic readers, but by no means uninteresting to non-Catholic readers.

Birth control is a private moral issue for Catholics to decide among themselves. But there is the one globe in which all of us live, and theoretically it would very little avail the globe if all the world's religions were to sanction birth control excepting the Catholic Church. If the 600,000,000 Catholics dissent, then there is eventually going to be a population problem if only on their account.

It is worth a moment's reflection on the point, because it is not generally recognized that the population explosion isn't simply a matter of the extension of religious dogma. Yes, the population of Latin America grows by leaps and bounds, and in Latin America one finds mostly Catholics. But it grows also by leaps and bounds in India, where there are no dogmatic problems, and, for instance, in Nigeria, where the birth rate, when last heard from, had reached the dizzyest rate of increases.

CRITICAL DECISION

The point being that even if the Pope were to modify the traditional position on birth control, the earth would by no means be spared, from that moment on, the dangers of overpopulation. But it is generally believed that the Catholic position is critical, and the moral and political support of the Catholic population is crucial to its success.

Mrs. Luce's intelligent and penetrating summary is plainly sympathetic with the position that the Natural Law does not command the iron requirement that population must eventually be curbed by "that Evil Trinity of all our darkest history — Famine, Pestilence, and War."

Her extrapolations, to be sure, appear to rule out two alternatives. The one, that sexual continence can ever be the answer to the problem of overpopulation. The other, that science will continue to prove, as it has during the past 150 years, that — in the words of Auberon Waugh — "two hands in fact create more than a single mouth consumes." She is visibly impressed (as I am) by the raw, benumbing figures, also come in the main from automobiles. In the presence of sunlight hydrocarbons and nitrogen oxides emitted by automobiles react to produce the brownish and photochemical smog that blankets Los Angeles for most of the year. And these gases pass readily through filters and air conditioners into supposedly sealed buildings.

California has decreed that all cars sold in the state from 1964 on be equipped with devices to reduce the emission of carbon monoxide by 50 per cent. But the number of cars being sold is outdistancing the reduction in pollution thus accomplished. And a horrendous thought lies hidden in the Los Angeles smog. The air which comes in over the Pacific now is clean. But what if the Chinese should ever gain a standard of living which would permit every Chinese family to own and drive a car. There is a distinct possibility that smog could eventually cover the earth.

Health, Education and Welfare Secretary John Gardner recently put it this way: "We need to look into the electric car, the turbine car, and any other means of propulsion that is pollution-free. Perhaps we also need to find other ways of moving people around. None of us would wish to sacrifice the convenience of private passenger automobiles, but the day may come when we may have to trade convenience for survival."

On that basis we have concluded that the present scale is a fair one. It probably is too high for some of the lesser men in the senate and assembly. But it is probably too low also for some of the superior men and those entrusted with the responsibilities of leadership. Surely in a time of generous salary scales in all other realms of public life, we can afford the comparatively tiny increase in the legislative budget, if only to assure ourselves that financial sacrifice won't discourage good men and women from competing for legislative seats.

As a matter of interest only, it is worth passing mention that the state of California has increased legislative pay more dramatically than any other. The salary there is now equal to $35,075 for a two year term, including all allowances, or about $17,500 a year. The other most generously paid state lawmakers in the country serve New York, Michigan and Pennsylvania, in that order.

Yet other states are curiously adamant on the matter. New Hampshire continues to pay the paltry sum of $200 a term. Rhode Island pays $600. A dozen or more states continue a scale that Wisconsin abandoned a couple of decades ago. For reasons that we cannot immediately guess, the tiny, in population terms, state of Alaska has one of the most generous scales in the country, at $17,600 a term.

Church Reform Never Ceases

Plans are being made to commemorate 1967 as the 450th anniversary of the Protestant Reformation. Yet such an anniversary is in some ways anticlimactic, for modern civilization has been forcing Christian Churches more than ever in recent years to re-examine traditionally accepted beliefs and reform that which is necessary to better serve this changing age.

An example of this rethinking of practices is a recent move by a major denomination to renew efforts toward full-scale integration in the realms of public action and the Church's institutional life. "We must pray for the grace to accept in Christian love the rebuffs that come from the opponents of racial justice and from those who have suffered unjustly while the Church and its members stood idly by," the Protestant leaders said.

The stand is necessary and one of many which have been taken by various Christian bodies in recent years. But in such action lies a danger against which the Christian Church must guard as it becomes much more involved in the world.

This is the threat that zealous Christians may begin to think that the main concern for them in the world today is man's brotherhood with man. With this view comes the danger of forgetting that the main concern of the Church is to preach Jesus Christ as the Savior of the world. By the nature of Christ's example and commands, this includes actively striving for the brotherhood of man.

If the Church therefore is to be the instrument of Christ, it must of necessity participate in securing equality for all. But if the Church is to be Christ's, that which He calls His Body, it must have something more to offer than leadership in the struggle for the rights of men. It must offer Christ, Whom it believes to be the answer for the problems of mankind. This is its mission.

Drafting Student Protestors

As Judge Harold Medina of the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit pointed out, that court is extremely reluctant to intervene in "the affairs of the Selective Service." But the reclassification of two students who protested United States policy in Vietnam was too much.

"The threat to First Amendment rights is of such immediate and irreparable consequence to not simply these students but to others as to require prompt action by the courts to avoid an erosion of these precious constitutional rights," wrote Judge Medina. "Historically these preferred and paramount rights have continually come under attack from the best intentioned sources. And once the erosion of these rights is permitted to begin, it is exceedingly difficult to halt. . . Of all constitutional rights, the freedoms of speech and of assembly are the most perishable, yet the most vital to the preservation of American democracy."

The students were among several at the University of Michigan who took part in an anti-war rally including an attempt to hold a sit-in at an Ann Arbor local draft board office. They were arrested and convicted of trespassing and are still appealing the sentence. Since they were residents of New York, the New York Selective Service director requested that their local boards reclassify them from 2-S, the deferred student status, to 1-A. A lower court had dismissed their case on the grounds that they had not suffered irreparable damage yet since they had not been inducted.

But the ruling of Judge Medina and his two associate justices makes it very clear that such attempts to use draft status as a punishment, at least when freedom of speech is concerned, cannot be condoned. In a way of course, the reclassification of students who do not make a certain grade point in college is also a punishment but a constitutional right is not involved unless of course one gets concerned with involuntary servitude. But this possibility is exactly why courts do not generally handle cases involving the draft. National survival depends upon a military force which under present pressures cannot be maintained otherwise than through the drafting of young men.

But when the public expression of an unpopular opinion is penalized by reclassification, the threat to American principles is frightening. National survival also depends upon those principles, since if we survive in form but not in substance, the battle is lost.

Sholes, Glidden Gave America Its First Workable Typewriter

BY LILLIAN MACKESY
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

TWO Wisconsin newspapermen of the last century were most responsible for the first American "writing machine" that was to replace the drudgery of longhand in the business world.

It was Christopher Latham Sholes who invented the first practical typewriter, perfecting it with three of his friends in a small Milwaukee machine shop owned by a man by the name of Kleinstuber. It was here in September of 1867 that Sholes gave a public demonstration of his machine with his friends and co-workers beside him. They were lawyer Carlos Glidden, who gave Sholes the idea of a typing machine—Samuel W. Soule, a draftsman and engineer whom the inventor sought out for advice—and machinist workman Matthias Schwalbach.

The story goes that it was at this demonstration that the now familiar words used as a test by most typists were first pecked out by Sholes. "Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of their party" was spelled out letter by letter on the keyboard of the machine that one bystander called "a cross between a piano and a kitchen table." Borrowed from a newspaper at hand, the sentence really was the popular Republican party slogan of the 1860s.

The other man was James Densmore, onetime publisher and editor of the True Democrat in Oshkosh. He was the man who never lost faith in Sholes' typing machine even after the inventor lost his. It was Densmore who played the important role of promoting the machine, introducing it to the famous Remington gunmakers in New York State and thereby bringing the invention to public attention in general.

Mark Twain Buys Remington

The Remington firm brought out its version of the typewriter, based on the original Sholes-Densmore patents, July 1, 1874. It was essentially the same machine as the one Sholes had perfected, except that it was made entirely of metal. One of the first purchasers of the innovation was author Mark Twain, who explained in a letter to a relative that "It piles up an awful stack of words on one page. It don't muss things or scatter ink blots around. Of course, it saves paper."

Twain also was the first author to submit a typewritten manuscript to a publisher. This was the typed collection of pages for his "Life on the Mississippi."

Although Sholes can be called the "father" of the typewriter, he faced the dilemma of many fellow inventors. He never realized much money nor even acclaim from his invention. In financial distress over the early years of trying to popularize his invention, he was forced to sell his interests before the writing machine caught on.

Although his hopes were high when he started working on the invention, Sholes was caught by the pinch of age, a family to support and failing health.

Inventor C. Latham Sholes

His belief that the machine had commercial possibilities began to wane. His three co-workers who shared an interest in the first business venture already had sold out to Densmore. Sholes sold out his last patents rights by 1881—shortly before the way was clear to success.

Densmore Hangs on Grimly

Fortunately, Densmore was too stubborn to give up. In debt himself over his repeated attempts to manufacture and sell the typewriter, he still held on. He held the original typewriter patents. He is the man who declared, "I have belief in the invention from the top-most corner of my hat to the bottom-most head of the nails of my boot-heels."

Even after his friend Sholes had perfected a portable machine which Remington claimed and got under the terms of their working contract, Densmore held onto his patents. His company had lost control of the operation because of financial difficulties and lagging sales; Remington finally gained control and was able to take over both the manufacture and sales of the machine. However, a legal loophole was discovered—one that was to precipitate a war of words and win the business battle for the steadfast Densmore.

The courts decided that because of the patent rights, Densmore and his firm could offer the rights of manufacture to other firms. Thus Remington lost its battle and Densmore started collecting money from competitors for use of the patents. His long, difficult and costly wait was paying off.

Both Enthusiastic Reformers

It was natural that Sholes and Densmore started out together as a team in this venture. They were old, close friends, both newspapermen with a zeal for reforming and promoting a better future. A printer who learned his craft in his native Pennsylvania, Sholes came to Green Bay at the age of 18 to help his brother publish the Wisconsin Democrat. In 1838, he was appointed the official state printer in Madison; he moved to the Wisconsin Inquirer and finally became the journal clerk of the state assembly. Moving on to Southport (later Kenosha) in 1840, Sholes

Irish Captain Rocky Bleier Wears 'Eighty Tons' of Pressure Lightly

BY LEN WAGNER
Post-Crescent News Service

BOB (ROCKY) BLEIER, hatless and with only a familiar, leather-sleeved letter jacket guarding against the fresh, clear cold of an early winter sundown, strode with a vigorous step across the University of Notre Dame campus at South Bend, Ind.

Many of the students scurrying to or from a late class recognized him.

"Hiya, Rock" . . . "How's it goin, Rock?"

None of them, however, noticed the weight he carried on his sturdy shoulders, for he gave no indication himself that it was there. But it was a self-rated "80 tons" of pressure labeled football captain.

Bleier, the Appleton tavern-keeper's son who, as a Xavier High School student first stunned the state with his athletic exploits before moving smoothly into the majestic realm of the Golden Dome, bore his burden smartly as he approached South Dining Hall.

Waves to Teammate

"Hey Coley," he waved to teammate Coley O'Brien as he pushed through the heavy door into a dimly-lit cafeteria that instantly reminds a visitor of a medieval castle's banquet room.

And minutes later, seated at a small table, a stack of pork chops and assorted other dishes carefully arranged in front of him, Bleier explained his "weight problem."

"It's a great honor," he began seriously but with a smile being born at the corners of his mouth. "The tradition of a captain here has been . . . well, in a way it's more than just the captain of a team, a football team or any team. You're sort of like captain of the whole university . . . all the students. You're really looked up to.

"This gets to be a great responsibility. You represent the team, the students, the faculty . . . the whole school. And this tradition makes it a difficult image to live up to. You've got to be an athlete but you also have to be a . . . well, a scholar and a gentleman. I only hope I can carry this responsibility like Jim Lynch has. He's been a great leader. He commands respect."

Engulfed by Tradition

Whether Bleier realized it or not, he was already living up to the image . . . the tradition that engulfs the likes of Jim Carroll, Jim Morse, Don Penza, Jim Mutscheller, Jerry Groom, Leon Hart, Bill Fischer, George Connor and back to Tom Hearden and Knute Rockne.

His manners, maturity, direct answers to questions, the clean look punctuating his handsome, dark-haired, dark-eyed features and the neat gold sweater over a blue knit shirt (coincidentally, or perhaps by design, the Notre Dame colors) contributed to the image.

It became obvious as he talked that the spirit of Notre Dame, which was now embodied in his own person, is more than just a passing handful of words to him.

"This spirit is real," he volunteered. "I don't know quite how to explain it but when you have an institution of all men, living together, eating, study-Appleton's Rocky Bleier has been in great demand on the banquet circuit since he was elected 1967 captain of Notre Dame — the nation's top-ranked college football team. ing together, sharing the same interests . . . Well, this spirit just seems to generate itself. You just know that the friendships you form here mean something. They're going to be more lasting than just the ordinary friendship."

The football pep rallies, where the spirit seems to manifest itself best, have left a deep impression on the 20-year-old Irish halfback.

"You've never seen anything like it," he grinned while reaching for one of the three glasses of milk on his tray. "You really get a feeling when there are five or six thousand kids in that fieldhouse just yelling and cheering and the band is playing the Victory March. I know one guy who transferred to the University of Wisconsin but he comes back here for football weekends and he wouldn't miss a pep rally. Really, you've just never seen anything like it."

Even the first two glasses of milk couldn't drown the enthusiasm that was swelling up inside him.

"I think it was this spirit that really convinced me that this is where I wanted to go to school."

The opportunities had been ample. A two-year all-state star in football, Rocky had captained his football, basketball and track teams in high school. And all of them were unbeaten. But the choice narrowed down to Notre Dame, Wisconsin and Boston College.

Russ Skall, a 1949 Irish graduate from Appleton, took him to a Notre Dame-Wisconsin football game in the fall of 1963, Rocky's senior year at Xavier. Later, Dave Hurd, then an Irish assistant coach, called on him and Bleier was taken by his sincerity.

He visited all three campuses and was also impressed with Boston College, but Ara Parseghian, who had just taken over as Notre Dame head coach, pointed out the spirit that pervaded the South Bend campus and the fact that the school is actually quite small, only about 7,500 students.

Tom Regner, the All-American guard of last fall, was Bleier's guide on the campus during that visit. Regner was just a freshman at the time, but he and Rocky knew each other through high school competition since Regner had attended Kenosha St. Joseph.

"We just walked down the campus and I was surprised at how many guys would say hi to Tom," Bleier recalled. "Then we went to a show at the campus theatre. There were only guys in there, and I just took a liking to the way they could yell back and forth and the atmosphere of fun that was in the place."

Irish in Background

The events that were launched by that trip still seem a bit unreal . . . something of a dream . . . to the new Irish leader, who actually does have a bit of Irish mixed with his French and German background.

It's doubtful if even his father, who nicknamed his newborn son Rocky because he looked solid as a rock and because he didn't want a junior in the family, or his mother, who quietly urged her son toward Notre Dame, envisioned such things as . . .

"Hey Rocky, will you sign this?" a tall bespectacled student asked as he shoved an old football program in front of Bleier and offered a ball point pen.

"You know, when you're a kid, you come running in the house on Saturday afternoon to watch the big game on television," the former Xavier star continued after accommodating the request.

"Now I'm here. When you think about that, just playing in the Michigan State game was a tremendous thrill. With all that game of the century stuff, 85,000 people in the stadium and, what did they say, 33 million watching on TV. I'm part of it . . . it's hard to believe."

It was even harder to believe earlier that fall, Rocky revealed.

Not Sure of Self

"I wasn't too sure of myself . . . stepping into a regular position. I thought I'd had a bad spring practice and even though I worked out about three or four times a week all summer, running pass patterns and just staying in condition. I didn't feel right. But as we went along I grew more confident. The biggest thing is to have that confidence. Once you have it, everything is a lot easier."

Despite this, though, Bleier was tagged as the "other guy" in the Irish backfield last year. Quarterback sensation Terry Hanratty, All-American halfback Nick Eddy and fullback Larry Conjar, called by Parseghian the best in the country, were the stars.

All of which left him a little surprised to have been named captain by his teammates.

But as he left the cafeteria for the short walk through the early evening's chill to Dillon Hall, his dormitory, Rocky Bleier admitted with a bit of pardonable pride in his voice, "I guess every football player that ever comes here thinks at one time or another about what it would be like to captain Notre Dame . . ."

Bob (Rocky) Bleier (28) reels off an 11-yard gain against Pittsburgh during the 1966 season. Bleier helped the Irish spill the Panthers, 40-0, en route to an unbeaten season. The other identifiable Notre Dame player is end Jim Seymour (85). (South Bend Tribune Photo)

Nature Reveals Her Secrets to Snowshoe Hikers

BY KATHERINE ANDREWS
Post-Crescent Correspondent

TO those who strap on snowshoes and slip quietly along snow-sparkled trails into hidden places of the wilderness, nature holds out a lure—that of revealing her secrets.

Pausing now and then to listen, the adventurer on snowshoes is likely to hear the call of a chickadee, the tap-tapping of a woodpecker and the distant howl of a coyote in pursuit of his quarry.

Michigan

Blazing a snowshoe trail into the cedar swamp or winding his way to the creek through a heavy stand of balsam the snowshoe hiker—unless the mischievous blue jay has announced the approach of man—may startle a sleepy cotton-tail rabbit, a snowshoe hare, a partridge, or perhaps a deer from its hiding place. During the winter, most of the deer "yard up" in herds numbering as many as 100. An occasional individual can be seen on the loose, however, until the snow becomes so deep and crusted over that walking is too hazardous for the whitetail with its narrow hooves.

Camera fans have long taken advantage of the scenic views of snowtime in the fields and woods. Nature photographers, with their special equipment, plus patience and repeated visits to wildlife areas, are able to get exceptional shots.

Alaskan

But deer, rabbits, fox and winter birds do not stay around to pose for the average shutter-bug. Most of us, whether we pack cameras or not, will find our expedition on snowshoes enhanced by rays of lemon-yellow sun as they filter through snow-decked trees; by the invigorating snap of cold, clear air, and by the scent of pine.

An additional bonus may be found in the tracks made by animals that prowled the winter woods. In addition to the snowshoe hare, rabbit and coyote, there are the white-footed mouse, the weasel, squirrel (red and gray) and occasionally a red fox. To assist identification books on animal tracking are available. Many of them are published in paper-back editions which fit easily into trouser or jacket pocket.

After a fresh snowfall, animal tracks are not easily seen, if at all. But when conditions are right for tracking, even the casual observer may read dramatic stories along the snow-packed trail.

Although it takes courage to strike out into the icy night, especially after a supper of steaming venison stew beside a crackling fireplace, moonlight on snow-covered field and forest offers the snowshoe enthusiast a tantalizing invitation.

When the beginner first straps on snowshoes, he will have to practice a while before venturing very far out on the trail, especially if the terrain is hilly, or if there are pot holes into which he may plunge. At first the novice will assume odd and awkward stances, much to the amusement of his companions and himself.

One of the intricacies of snowshoeing lies in learning how to make turns; if this is done too sharply, the snowshoes may become crisscrossed and the wearer is likely to find his feet tangled up in much the same fashion as when playing the "Twist".

But it doesn't take long to catch on, and then you're off across the snow into backwoods country. If you have a vivid imagination, you may experience a sense of kinship with the famous Arctic explorers and Alaskan "sourdoughs". Maybe you will think of dog-sleds and huskies and hear the parka-clad drivers shouting, "Mush!"

Snowshoe hikers quickly learn to develop a loose-jointed, relaxed stride. This is less tiring than trying to lift the feet as in ordinary walking, and the snowshoer soon finds himself gliding along with ease and speed. There are times, of course, when a layer of soft, freshly-fallen snow allows the snowshoe wearer to sink in more than when there is a solid base. But there is compensation in knowing that to plow through knee-deep snow without snowshoes means a spine-jarring jolt with every step, not to mention the hazards of exhaustion.

When going down steep hillsides where the snow is packed and slippery, it is helpful to turn sideways and place snowshoes crosswise of the trail. To keep balance, lean backward slightly and sidestep down the slope, keeping snowshoes parallel. Ski poles may be used to advantage for balance and speed. They also come in handy to clear the snowshoe webbing of wet snow. This is done by tapping the shoe every four or five steps as you walk.

All clothing should be loose enough to allow free circulation of air to help reduce chances of overheating, with resulting soaking of clothes by perspiration. Winter socks should be worn in side boots that are roomy enough to let the toes move freely.

Carry a compass no matter how well you know the woods and country you are going to traverse. On sunless winter days it is easy to lose your sense of direction where one stand of popple, birch and pin resembles another.

Not yet developed are effective snowshoes for dogs, as the author appears to be telling a four-footed enthusiast in this photo.

'Weeds of Forest' Now Used Widely by Industry

BY CLARA HUSSONG

Compared to maple, oak, pine and birch, poplar trees are not highly regarded in our state. To early lumbermen, they were often the weeds of the forest, for their use as lumber was negligible. Today the wood is used in making crates and barrels, excelsior and wood pulp.

In the prairie states these trees were much more highly regarded. Often the only tree which grew wild in those dry areas was the cottonwood which sprouted on the banks of streams. Like the poplar, it was a favorite of the early settlers for planting as a windbreak around their homes. Here and there from Illinois westward there are still giant cottonwoods standing, marking the site of a homestead. Some of these trees are more than 20 feet in circumference.

Five varieties of poplar grow in Wisconsin. They are the two aspens, trembling and coarse-toothed; two balm of Gilead species, also called "balsam poplars," and the eastern cottonwood. Two introduced species, planted extensively around home grounds, have become naturalized and are now also growing wild. They are the white or silver leaf poplar, and the Lombardy.

All cottonwood leaves tremble at the slightest breeze, but it is most noticeable in the trembling aspen. The flattened stem end of the leaves, attached to a stout twig, causes the trembling.

The trembling aspen, also called "quaking asp" or "popple," is common all over the state but is most often found in moist sandy ground, or on gravelly hillsides. Before the leaves come out in spring, it bears its catkin blossoms, the red male blossoms on one tree and the green female blossoms on another. This division of the sexes is common to all poplars and willows as well.

The aspen is beautiful in early spring when it is decorated with the colorful "pussies," and again a little later when the new, almost round leaves appear. It has a pale green bark, covered with rough black patches, and is sometimes mistaken for a birch. It is a pioneer tree, the first to appear after a fire, or after lumbering operations.

The coarse-toothed aspen is a little larger and looks less delicate. It is found in rich, moist soil and at the edges of swamps, lakes and streams. It can be told from the quaking asp by its leaves, with their coarse-toothed edges. There are said to be 17 "tooth marks" on every leaf of this species.

The two balm of Gileads, or balsam poplars, are known by the fragrant resin which covers the buds and the new leaves. The leaves have a longer point than those of aspen. The smooth balm of Gilead grows in moist soil of river edges and swamps; the hairy variety, named for its hairy leaf stem, is found everywhere.

Our variety of cottonwood is the eastern. It grows to a good size and can be told by its triangular, or deltoid leaf. This is the tree that often breaks up sidewalks and basement walls, because of its shallow, wide-spreading root system. It is not recommended for home grounds.

Lombardy poplars can be told at all seasons by their skyward-reaching branches. The white, velvety undersides of the silver poplar's leaves are its distinguishing mark.

'Snowshoes Are Made in Three Recognized Styles...'

matches, a map of the area and sunglasses to protect your eyes from the glare. Some outdoorsmen wear tinted glasses even on cloudy days.

Snowshoes are made in three generally recognized styles: the Michigan, the Alaskan and the Bear Paw. Selection should be made to suit the purpose to which they will be put and the type of country that will be traversed.

The Michigan style is a general-purpose shoe and has a short forward webbing or toe which permits the wearer to walk up close to obstacles. The toe is curved up slightly. This shape finds favor with woodcutters and others who work in the woods and brush.

The Alaskan or cross-country style is longer and narrower than the Michigan. It is especially liked by hikers, hunters and trappers who may travel long distances in deep, soft snow. The high upward curve of the toe aids in surmounting mounds and drifts of snow, and the long "tail" acts as a rudder in keeping the wearer on the trail.

The Bear Paw, so called because of its general resemblance in shape to a bear's paw, has several variations in styling. Some are long and narrow with a slightly upturned toe; others are more nearly oval in shape. This style is useful in very heavy brush where it is necessary to maneuver quickly, and is much favored by those who hunt snowshoe hares.

The frames of snowshoes are usually made of white ash, steamed and bent to shape, and the webbing is made of rawhide. Bindings are made of leather and come in several styles, of which the "H" type is the most common. The frames and webbing are kept varnished to prevent wear, and to keep rodents from chewing them. When not in use the shoes should be hung up, back to back.

Snowshoes vary in cost from $25 to $40 and the bindings from $4 to $5. Junior sizes can be made to order, and plastic snowshoes are available for youngsters under five years of age.

The basic principle of the snowshoe is one of distributing the weight of the body over a larger area than when on foot, and was recognized by our primitive ancestors. Archaeological discovery points to the use of snowshoes in crude forms many centuries ago.

There have been only minor changes in the design of the snowshoe in the past 500 years, yet today snowshoes still hold their own alongside modern innovations for getting about in winter.

Besides the modest cost involved, the skill of snowshoeing is easily acquired by persons of all ages

Book of Field Trial Champions Helps Columnist Answer Queries

National Field Trial Champions. By William F. Brown. A. S. Barnes & Co. $10.

Most of the time, when a reader asks a columnist a question, if the writer knows his subject he can answer it "off the top of his head." But there are a lot of times when a question requires some "looking up" to get a correct answer.

Recently, this writer received questions involving past winners of the National Field Trial Championship, which has been held 67 times near Grand Junction, Tenn. and will have its 68th renewal since 1896 starting Feb. 20.

In the past, the reference book for those of us not possessing computer-type minds has been a volume entitled National Field Trial Champions by William F. Brown and Nash Buckingham. But the book is now out of print, virtually impossible to obtain and, since it was published in 1955, carries information only through that year.

Fortunately, Brown, editor of the American Field, a Chicago publication specializing in bird dogs, has seen fit to produce a supplement to the original book. This $10, 252-page volume is entitled "National Field Trial Champions 1956-66."

Utilizing material previously run in the American Field, the book provides an interesting account of how each champion won his crown during the 1956-66 period, along with virtually everything any pointing dog fan would want to know about the National Field Trial Championship—the place it is run, the human and canine competitors, the bobwhite quail, the statistics and the persons responsible for its continued success.

Then, recognizing that many persons would like to check on a champion prior to 1956, Brown has —from toddler to grandparents. The outdoorsman, whatever his quest may be, soon finds that snowshoes take him swiftly and silently into remote reaches of swamp, field and forest where nature may unveil her mysteries.

appended a list of all past National Champions, dating back to 1896, giving the dog's name, breed and sex, color, sire, dam, breeder, owner and handler. The pedigrees and breeding of the 1956-66 National Champions are discussed in detail for those students of bird dog production who are looking for a good "nick."

Statistical breakdowns show the number of entries in each trial; the number of pointers vs. setters, and the dogs and bitches, along with the bird scores of each champion, from Count Gladstone, the 1896 setter dog champion, to Safari, the 1966 pointer bitch champion.

While this is certainly a book for the serious student of pointing dogs, it by no means is dull. The full-flowered writing style may seem a bit exaggerated at times, but it carries the reader along as he gets into it, and the observations about the dogs are accurate and incisive. Furthermore, Brown takes his own statistics and then translates them into prose, saving the reader the chore of tabulating titles and wins.

There's probably no one in the U. S. as well qualified to turn out this book as Bill Brown. As the editor of what is the oldest sportsmen's publication in the world, and guardian of the Field Dog Stud Book, he has probably looked at more field trial pointers and setters than any other man living.

He puts this knowledge and background into a much-needed book, which if studied carefully by the reader, can make the interested student as much an expert (on paper at least) as the author is in actuality.

Club Fighter Vidal Flores: Home Is Where His Hopes Are

BY KEN HARTNETT

MILWAUKEE — (AP) — His trainer calls him a tiger but the brown eyes of Vidal Flores are soft and at 32 his hairline is receding.

He held a baby in his arms and said, "I don't know if I have the killer instinct. But I do all I can to win."

Vidal Flores is a gentle man caught up in two harsh trades. He is a butcher by day and a boxer by night.

At the first, Flores is good and respected. At the other, he is unproven and obscure. Both are the fabric of his existence. One offers him a regular paycheck; the other a dream.

He trains for the ring each night; each morning at 5 o'clock he reports to the Monarch Meat Packing Co. and begins wrestling 250-pound slabs of beef to the carving table.

His knives are honed to a scalpel-sharp edge. They slice into the meat and soon his white work coat is stained with blood and flecks of animal flesh.

For eight hours, Flores cuts the sides down into smaller sections and shuttles them to seven other butchers assigned more delicate work.

The others count on him. They are paid for piece work and Flores must keep the meat moving. "If you don't have a good breaker, you don't make any money," a butcher said. "That's all on his shoulders. All the weight is on his shoulders."

Flores makes, with piece work, over $4 50 an hour. He is pleased with his job and his pay. It is enough to feed, clothe and house his children.

There are nine children. The oldest is 9 years, the youngest 6 months. They drink 14 gallons of milk a week.

"A lot of people are depending on me," said Flores.

Flores and his wife, Garnetta, want to own their own home someday, perhaps near Flores' mother in Corpus Christi, Tex. Flores wants to pay cash for it.

So he fights. Flores is a preliminary boy. He never dreams of being a champion or even a contender.

"I want to be a 10-round fighter," he said, "and make some money."

He trains after work in his basement or at a gym in the Christian Center.

"He has good possibilities," said his trainer, Ted Porter, an ex-fighter and coalman now retired. "I doesn't drink, smoke or chew. He has a boy's body — there's no wrinkles or flabby spots on him."

Flores, a middleweight, said he and Porter have an agreement. "I told Porter that if he thinks I'm getting hit too much I want him to tell me and I quit right away. I don't want to get hurt. My family will need me. We trust one another. He said he will tell me right away."

Vidal has strong wrists, shoulders and arms. His middle appears somewhat puffy. He is conscious of his weight. "I like potatoes but when I'm fighting I don't eat too many potatoes," he said.

Flores began fighting again last year after a 3½-year layoff. He had been under contract to a manager, but broke with him after he was matched with Doug McLeod. McLeod stopped Flores with a left hook. Flores felt he was overmatched.

"No one had showed him anything," Porter said. "He used to fight with his hands down."

Porter assumed a boxing stance. Flores followed suit. Porter shot a left, then a right. Both were picked off by Flores' hands.

He fights to win, but Vidal Flores, 32, of Milwaukee—butcher by day, boxer by night—has no hope or ambition to become a champion. He now fights four-round preliminary bouts to supplement his income. He would like to become a 10-rounder to earn more. Flores, twice Wisconsin Golden Gloves champ, returned to the ring as a professional last year after a 3½-year layoff. Here he shadow boxes. He trains every night. (AP Newsfeatures Photo)

"Show how you counter," Porter said. Flores pushed the left hand down, then brushed aside a right and moved in really to fire a right-left-right combination.

"My belief is that you can box without getting hit," said Porter, whose nose bears witness to the art of self defense. "You're taking punches, sure, but on your elbows and arms. You use footwork."

The mock exhibition ended.

"We do that steady," said Porter. "That's what gives you confidence he can make a career of it. Boxing is easy when you know what you're doing."

"I've got a secret method," Porter said. "Nobody knows it. I hope to cash in on it someday."

Flores, born outside San Antonio, Tex., dropped out of school in the ninth grade. He followed a brother to Wisconsin in 1953 and went to work as a meat packer.

He weighed close to 200 pounds. "I was kind of chubby and I started going to the Urban League to lose weight. Someone told me, 'I know a good way to lose weight — start boxing.' So I did."

Before long, Flores — 5-foot-7 — was down to 147 pounds and was entering the Golden Gloves. He also was doing well at his job. They wanted him to become a cutter. Flores refused.

"I didn't want to cut my hands and I stayed away from the knife for a long time, doing clean up jobs and things like that. I really wanted to box and not to cut myself. After I quit, I went in to the knife."

Flores' job appears to be almost as dangerous as the ring. Sometimes there are slips with the finely honed knives. "We started wearing these hard rubber aprons after a guy in Chicago cut himself. He got it right in the groin," one of Flores' co-workers said. "In 35 seconds, he was dead."

Flores is a careful worker. "If I started fighting 10 rounds, I would have to get a part-time job. It would be too much. It takes too much out of you. I can always come back to packing later. I could never forget how to use a knife. When you learn a trade, you never forget," he said.

The Flores apartment is in a public housing project on Milwaukee's predominantly Negro North Side. It has five bedrooms. Flores is pleased with it.

"There are a lot of things I need right now," he said. "I could have a lot of things in this place. All I have to do is go into a store and charge it, but I don't want to get into debt."

As a preliminary fighter, Flores gets $75 for each four-rounder. As a professional he has had eight fights and won seven of them — including two in his "comeback." He had better than 25 fights as an amateur. "I don't remember what my record was," he said. "I didn't lose many."

Twice he was Wisconsin Golden Gloves champion. Flores has soft brown eyes. It is hard to imagine them hardened in anger.

"I don't know if I have a killer instinct," he said. "I'm there to win. I do all I can to win."

"When the bell rings, he's a different Vidal," said Porter. "He's a tiger."

Porter's tiger has a home with a religious picture on almost every wall. He is particularly proud of a color portrait of Our Lady of Guadalupe. "A priest gave it to me," he said.

His bedroom is also the family's praying room. "The whole family prays there together every night," Flores said.

Flores is a Catholic. "You won't get him to train on Sunday," said Porter.

"I do a lot of church work," Flores said. "I visit people. Me and another fellow go to the houses of fallen-away Catholics and talk to them. I like that kind of work and I try to teach my own children as much as I can. We pray together before I go to bed."

Porter was discussing a tentative match for Flores. The fight would be in two weeks. Vidal was apprehensive. He was bothered by an ankle injury and had not been training. The fight would be a step up to six rounds. It would be worth $150.

"I only have two weeks," he said. "I haven't been training much."

Flores' concern did not last long. "I don't worry about nothing," he said. "I have faith in Christ and that's why I never worry. I always find a way to manage."

Boxing is no drudgery to Flores. "I like to do it," he said. "A lot of people think I'm crazy. 'Why do you do it, Vidal?' they say. 'Why do you want to box for?'"

Vidal's 9-year-old came home from school with a newspaper clipping showing Flores in action against Al Mills. "He told them at school his father was a boxer and they didn't believe him," Flores explained. "He brought this into school to show them."

So far, Flores has no money to show for his comeback. "I told my wife," he said. "that if ever I make some money I'm going to buy a home and pay cash for it. She wants to go to Texas and buy a house down in Corpus Christi."

The money Flores is seeking is the $800 to $1,000 purse that goes to main event fighters in cities like Milwaukee. "I'll put it in the bank," he said. "All the money I make from boxing is going in the bank."

The risks of boxing don't faze Flores, who is confident he'll get out of the business before he starts taking heavy head punches.

Porter said Flores will not be hurt. "I was in there myself," he said. "I know what it is."

"I have more confidence since Mr. Porter is training me," said Flores. "No one ever taught me anything before. I was young and had a lot of strength but I wasn't using my head much. Now I know what I'm going to do. I'm using my head more."

Cities Gather Forces in Fight For Equitable Share of Taxes

(Editor's Note: The following is a speech given by Mayor Henry Maier of Milwaukee before a Sheboygan Service club. Because the subject is of keen interest to Fox Cities communities, it is being run in its entirety.)

Not too many years ago, anyone speaking to a group of this kind would have to say that the nation's number one domestic problem was agriculture.

No doubt we would have addressed ourselves to the question: How do we save the family farm?

But now the family farmer has moved to the city, and the family farm is rapidly becoming a nostalgic dream.

One hundred years ago, only 15 out of every 100 persons in Wisconsin lived in urban places. Today at least 66 out of every 100 live in urban places. By 1980, we can expect at least 71 out of every 100 to live in urban places.

In the 1950 census of Wisconsin, there were four standard metropolitan areas. In 1960 there were six.

Appleton Growth

Between the census of 1950 and the census of 1960, the city of Appleton grew by more than 42 per cent. The population of Janesville increased by a bit more than 41 per cent. That of Kenosha by almost 25 per cent. Racine by 25 per cent. Neenah by 45 per cent. Waukesha by 41 per cent. Sheboygan increased by over 7 per cent.

At a time when the population of most large central cities in the country was decreasing, the population of Milwaukee increased by 16.3 per cent.

The increase in Milwaukee's population was larger than the total population of Wisconsin's second largest city in 1950.

The march of urbanization in our state gobbles up hundreds and hundreds of acres each year. Often it is a rag-tag march, with natural splendor replaced by man-made squalor. Instead of orderly growth, we often find plain anarchy — disorderly urban sprawl around a central city hard-put to preserve its very life, much less is civilizing characteristics.

Today we have reached an era in Wisconsin where urban problems are state problems, and I submit that we need an increasing recognition of this fact at the state level. We have no greater task than to impress this fact upon our legislators, our senators, even some of our administrators and the people of this state.

Nor are the problems of urban America given sufficient recognition at the national level.

More Slum Dwellers

In this urban age we probably have more slum dwellers than farmers. Yet it's estimated that the federal government allocates about $1 to our cities for every $13 that are allocated to saving our farms.

We spend about as much in developing a single space shot as we spend in federal assistance to urban renewal.

We spend many more dollars in building highways between cities than we do on building the cities themselves.

We have now reached the

Mayor Henry Maier

point where our largest population centers are becoming the have-not communities of the state and of the nation.

Long looked upon as the rich uncles of this state, our cities are now the poor cousins.

On top of it all, here in Wisconsin, the central cities are starved by an antiquated system of state aids and shared taxes that fails to provide them with the resources they require for healthy growth and development. Taxes are collected on the basis of ability to pay, but not distributed on the basis of need.

This antiquated system of state aids and shared taxes perpetuates tax islands in the metropolitan area around the central city. In case after case, we find central cities struggling to survive while all around them are affluent suburbs.

Let me show you what I mean.

Wealthy Islands

The map shows average family income in the Milwaukee area. It illustrates how the resources, the money, is separated from the overriding needs of the community.

Notice that there are two tightly concentrated but widely separated groups. In the upper right hand corner of the map you see islands of green. In the center you see the cross-hatched areas in the red, the deficit areas of the poor.

In these dollar sign areas, families have an average income of $10,000 or more a year.

In the deficit area — an area which costs city taxpayers an estimated $9 million a year to service — the average family makes less than $5000 a year.

This area, the only haven of the poor in metropolitan Milwaukee, is in the City of Milwaukee. In fact, the 1960 census showed that one out of nine families in the central city of Milwaukee had income of less than $3,000 a year.

Here's another of the burdens that the central city carries. This white square represents the number of acres in Milwaukee which are tax-exempt and which contain services for the entire metropolitan area.

This block does not include churches. But it does include such things as colleges, hospitals, women's clubs, airports and the like. Valued at just short of half a billion dollars, this tax-exempt property represents over three times the real estate values in the entire city of Sheboygan.

At our current tax rate, this property would add more than $5 million a year to the city of Milwaukee revenues — enough to clear 100 acres of slum, or pay for almost one-third of our police costs, or pay for practically all of our garbage collection and disposal.

My point is not to question the desirability of these tax-exempt services. I think they are fine and necessary. My point is that since they are concentrated in the central city, this increases the burden which the lowest income people carry on their back, although the services are claimed by everyone in the metropolitan area.

Still another burden carried on the backs of central city taxpayers are increased school costs. These are due primarily to the need for educating members of large low-income families which are, for the most part, zoned out of suburban areas.

The result is that the City of Milwaukee has to put off many of the things it needs right now to put things into top shape. These range from street maintenance to combatting Dutch elm disease. We can't afford them. We don't have the money. So we put them off.

Pollution Costs

Take water pollution. The State of Wisconsin has insisted that the City of Milwaukee, in the years ahead, must separate its storm and sanitary sewers. Experts tell us the bill could run as high as half a billion dollars. The city doesn't have that kind of money. It can't solve this problem without help from other levels of government.

In short, the more broadly based resources of the county, state and federal governments will have to be called into play if the central city is to survive as a dynamic service center for the metropolitan area.

This is why I began the great city crusade for resources last June.

The basic message I have taken throughout the city, the suburbs, the state and even other parts of the country, since that time is that the fate of the central city is really the fate of the metropolitan area — that the fate of the central city is really the fate of metropolitan Milwaukee.

I have sought allies for fiscal reform in other parts of the state and of the nation. It is the reason why I am here this afternoon.

Milwaukee no longer suffers alone the problems afflicting a regional center in this state. There are a number of Wisconsin cities in the same leaky boat, including Sheboygan, Appleton, Oshkosh, Fond du Lac, Neenah and Menasha. Together they are banding together with Milwaukee to pursue the question of fiscal justice for the central city.

Don't Bear Share

Each of these regional centers is surrounded by tax islands. Each serves vast areas which do not bear their share of the costs for metropolitan services performed by the central city. Each carries the burden of large amounts of tax-exempt property. Each has seen flight of industry and wealth to the suburbs which in turn speeded up decay and blight within its boundaries. And if they do not yet suffer all the problems of the larger cities it is merely a question of time.

The city's tax base in most cases has eroded while its property tax has gone up and up.

As New York's Mayor Lindsay puts it: the upper and middle income suburbs — in his words — "try to build a high wall to protect themselves from the city core. The major problem of the cities," he says "is to break down that wall, to make the suburban areas an integral part of the cities upon which they live." In other words, we must break down the wall that separates the resources of the community from its needs.

No, Milwaukee is no longer alone in this crusade for reform. Mayor Brown has the same basic problem here in Sheboygan as I do in Milwaukee. So does the mayor of Green Bay, the mayor of Oshkosh, the mayor of Appleton and the mayor of Kenosha. I dare say that there is not a single central city mayor in the state who does not have the same fundamental problem of how to obtain sufficient resources to meet overriding needs.

Depend on Cities

This is why tax reform to give more aid to the cities of Wisconsin should be the state's first order of business. The people of Wisconsin are dependent upon their cities now. If the state is to grow and prosper, then the fiscal barriers separating resources from needs must come tumbling down.

True, a portion of the state income tax is returned to the localities in which the taxpayer lives. But in the most affluent areas, incomes are so high that the state income tax return pays a much higher percentage of the costs of local government than in areas of lower income. Those who could best afford to pay higher property taxes are subsidized at the cost of the low income taxpayers usually found in the central city. For example, in the 18 Milwaukee county suburbs, state aids and shared taxes pay, on the average, 70 per cent of the costs of local government.

But if you live in the city of Milwaukee, state aids and shared taxes pay only 30.6 per cent of the costs of your government.

This is one of the reasons that a wealthy suburban school district can easily afford to spend $1,000 per pupil for public schools compared to Milwaukee's $600.

Nelson Saw Need

This is not a new subject in Wisconsin. It has been studied, restudied and studied again. And all of the studies have come to the same basic conclusion: Our cities are not getting the help that they need.

When Senator Nelson was governor, his blue ribbon committee stated bluntly: "The financial problems of our municipalities are far more acute concerned Americans, but by the Communists! Mr. Ross, pull the rug out from under the Communists; take the ball away from them. Direct your energies and your commitment to America toward feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, and providing for the needs of all Americans, rather than toward useless "exposure". Communism hasn't a chance in America if we see that the material and spiritual needs of each American are met, whether through government legislation or through our own active, personal involvement in legitimate causes.

Writer Was Unfair to Dr. King

Editor, Post-Crescent:

I would like to say a few words regarding the letter of Paul Ross, which was in The Post-Crescent Sunday, Jan. 22. His efforts to portray Martin Luther King as a Communist agitator, and an enemy of Negroes and Americans are certainly grossly unfair, and in line with the old Birch tactic of labeling everyone a Communist, who does not endorse their bigoted ideas. Dr. King has never advocated Communism, and he has done much to help Negroes to gain self-confidence and dignity, and to protect against discrimination and injustice. He has shaken us out of our apathy, and made all fairminded Americans aware of the great injustice our Negroes have endured for a hundred years, to the utter disregard of our Constitution and Bill of Rights.

Let us give Dr. King credit for leading the Negro revolt along peaceful lines, and let us remember, that, if we make peaceful revolution impossible, violent revolution is inevitable. There are, of course, radical agitators working among the Negroes, but the vast majority of them deserve much credit for turning a cold shoulder to Communist propaganda, so let us help them gain a chance to live in security and dignity among us.

Guilt by association, is an old tactic of the Birchers. But if a man attends a meeting of some organization that is labeled Communist, that does not make him a Communist. A long time ago I attended a couple of meetings of the Ku Klux Klan, just to see what they were like. I utterly despise them, and it does not make me a Klansman, any more than the people who listen to Rockwell can be labeled Nazis. By the way, anyone interested in the aims of the Nazis, should read the magazine of the American Nazi party "The Storm Trooper". I don't think any well meaning or fairminded person can read it without deep disgust and nausea.

This Map of the City of Appleton, surrounded by towns which take away shopping areas, homes and manufacturing plants, is an example of the problem facing cities in Wisconsin and discussed in the accompanying article by Milwaukee's Mayor Henry Maier. He is leading metropolitan areas in a fight than those of the state government itself."

Milwaukee will make some proposals at the current session of the state legislature. The effect of these proposals on the central cities in the state are — although in preliminary form — shown on the sheet which has been passed out to you. These figures have been compiled by our new city department of intergovernmental fiscal liaison.

As you can readily see, every one of the 21 largest cities in the state could expect to benefit under our proposals.

Sheboygan, for instance, would get almost $70,000 more under our proposals than it would receive under the present system of shared taxes.

Fond du Lac, Oshkosh and Appleton all would get over $100,000 more. Neenah would get almost $60,000 in addition with Menasha receiving upwards of $22,000 more. Even Green Bay, despite its large utility company holdings, would receive $35,000 more than it receives under the present system.

A glaring example of the unfairness of the present method of districting utility taxes is the proposed new atomic generating plant in the town of Two Creeks in nearby Manitowoc County. The town of Two Creeks presently levies local taxes amounting to about $60,000.

Two Creeks Prospects

The estimated cost of the new plant is $65 million. On this basis the town of Two Creeks will receive about $800,000 a year in utility taxes collected by the state.

That represents about $2,000 for every man, woman and child in the town of Two Creeks. They'll have to build a new town hall with an attached warehouse just to store the money.

One of the proposals seeks to correct glaring inequities in the present method of distributing the state utility tax. Another set is aimed at relieving property taxes in high-tax areas.

Taken into account in these figures is the $2 million which the governor pledged in his state of the state address to restore to the property tax relief fund. This money would be taken from the state's general fund.

The figures reflect a proposed change in the distribution of the utility tax. Under our proposal some of the funds now distributed as part of the state's utility tax formula — approximately 10 per cent — would be distributed as part of the state tax relief formula. Communities which have large utility company holdings would lose their "tax island" privileges under the revision. To be benefited most are the central cities with the highest property tax rates.

Other Diversions

In the distribution of the remaining utility tax fund, more weight would be given where the utility companies do their business rather than where their plant is located.

The size of the property tax relief pie would also be bolstered by a sharing with the state of an expected increase in revenue from the selective sales tax, plus a diversion of income taxes above the amount now shared with local governments on the present basis.

In both cases, municipalities with the highest property tax rates would benefit the most. While the changes will provide a measure of relief for the harder-pressed cities of the state, let's not kid ourselves. Our needs are such that there must be a drastic reorientation of state thinking about urban aid in Wisconsin. And we've reached a stage where our problems will not wait for a new study.

With all due respect to the governor, a new task force will not pay our mounting municipal bills, solve our social problems, eliminate blight, or clean up the slums. In his budget message last week the governor himself said that our present system of state aids and shared taxes "may well be outdated in terms of the best distribution of dollars to meet local government problems." Indeed, it is.

And with due respect to the state tax commissioner, I must agree with Fox Valley officials who drastically disagreed with his statement that local governments should be reorganized before state tax-sharing formulas are changed.

Mayors Going Ahead

You may have read the comments of Mayor Buckley in the Appleton Post-Crescent. He referred to the tax commissioner's statements as — and I quote — "The remarks of one man who doesn't appear to have too much knowledge of local government... the mayors are still going ahead with their plans to press the legislature for action."

Milwaukee, like Appleton, Sheboygan, Fond du Lac and other central cities, is in need of action now. Action now, because the most important problem in our state — indeed in our nation — is the problem of our cities.

If we are to build great cities — cities in which there is richness of opportunity, openness, freedom, beauty, health, safety, —functional cities — cities in which civilized man can live the good life — then additional funds must be forthcoming from our county, state and federal governments.

The need is great. The time is short.

This is the challenge to our cities. Do we build the great city or do we let the city wither away? Greatness or decline. There is no standing still.

And if we are to build the great city, then we need the financial resources to do the job.

This is important not only for our urban areas, but also for the state of Wisconsin, and for our nation as a whole.

We cannot be a great state without great cities. As the president has declared, "our nation cannot be great unless our cities are great."

All Statists Represent Rule by Brute Force

Editor, Post-Crescent,

A deadly kind of discrimination is rampant in this country but gets little attention. This blind ignorance is dramatically demonstrated right in our own backyard. The news media is well sprinkled with reports of Lincoln Rockwell's invitation to speak at Lawrence University in the near future. He of course represents the Nazi party which originated Germany. Nazi is the abbreviation for National Socialist German Workers Party. This man represents the well publicized crimes against humanity during the period of Fascist tyranny in Hitler's Germany. The atrocities, the brutalities and the looting of private property is fresh in the minds of most Americans. The deep concern of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Jewish War Veterans, and Jewish leaders of the Fox River Valley is understandable and should be commended.

cist-Socialist (one type of Statist or Leftist) is in itself a nauseating and horrifying incident, but the most frightening of all is that just a few weeks ago a man representing an equally amoral kind of Socialism (Communist Statism) appeared at the same University and I heard hardly a squeak of displeasure by the people that are now exhorting displeasure (and it is justified) at the appearance of Rockwell. When the Communist Herbert Aptheker spoke at Lawrence and espoused his filthy lies about the "popular communist movement" a predicting a communist police state in the U.S. within a generation. Some people in the audience actually applauded this despicable prediction.

Herb Aptheker, Gus Hall and Frank Wilkinson are welcomed on campuses all over the U.S. to poison the minds of our college students (with lies) under the guise of "Academic Freedom." And hardly a whimper of discontent by the news media and good citizens! These Communist Statist approve of the murders, the concentration camps, and the terror of all the present and past communist that have looted the peoples property and taken their freedom by brute force.

There is no such thing as a good Nazi or Communist Tito, Stalin, Khrushchev, Ho Chi Minh, Brezhnev, Mao Tse-tung, Ben Bella, Castro, Kennedy, and all the rest of the butchers have in the past and are still killing, maiming, and suppressing their poverty stricken populations. Gus Hall "that nice communist" said, "I dream of the hour when the last congressman is strangled to death on the guts of the last preacher." Are the American people going to stand around and sound the alarm at only one kind of Socialist beast while we let the more "acceptable" beasts (the kind we build bridges to) circulate in our midst?

Statist (Communist, Fascist, Nazi, Autocrat, Collectivist, Welfare Statist) are all in the same totalitarian boat. They represent rule by force and looting of the peoples property which ends in terror and concentration camps. Fascists (Nazis) are not "Rightist". This is clever communist propaganda that has been espoused by the liberal American press. They (Fascist) represent total government, by ownership or control of the means of production. In the political spectrum this is leftism, clear and simple. The people of our country are being led by nose (conditioned) by the liberal establishment (Rockefeller - Ruether - Harriman and their Council on Foreign Relations) which tells us free people can live in peaceful co-existence with Godless, ruthless, deceitful communism. The kind of Statist brute is of little importance. Statism means enslavement by looting of the peoples property and dividing it among the politicians. Will Americans wake up in time? Who knows? Only time will answer this moot question.

If the immutable Mao Tse-tung is, indeed, losing his grip on the "Great Proletarian Cultural Revolution," it's not for lack of trying—just lack of good slogans. Such is the opinion of your servant's Great and Good Friend, Mrs. Winnie Bageaux, just back from an incognito romp through the pleasure domes of the People's Republic of China. Box Brownie in hand, and garbed in basic blue by Molyneux, the estimable Winnie photographed the proles, at protest and play, and returned to report that all Mao needs to survive is a first-rate advertising copywriter. Such venerable chestnuts as "Long Live the All-Conquering Thought of Chairman Mao," daubed on every fence, wall and tree in Peking, have had it and should be respectfully laid to rest. The answer, Winnie thinks, is to adapt the great ad appeals of the past to Mao's purposes . . . to wit: started that community's first newspaper, the Southport Telegraph.

These two espoused causes, championing them long and loudly in their respective newspapers. Densmore was a Free Soiler, he backed labor unions for the common worker, he plumped editorially for phonetic spelling in the schools, free postage and better roads. His counterpart in Kenosha preached reform, believing it to be the road to salvation. He opposed war and capital punishment, backed the temperance movement, supported the principle of women's rights and opposed slavery with violence.

It was during his years in politics as a member of the state legislature (he served in both houses) that he met Densmore. Each recognized the other as a kindred spirit who believed in "good causes." The pair even tried to publish two newspapers together. One was a Free Soil journal and the second a daily paper in Kenosha. Both failed and the two men went their separate ways, Sholes staying in Kenosha until 1857 and Densmore eventually ending up in Pennsylvania.

When Sholes was ready to interest his friend in the new invention, he did it simply by typing a letter on the new machine. He explained the invention and discussed the possibilities of making their fortunes with it. Densmore, as Sholes surmised, became caught in the excitement of the venture. When he saw the machine, however, he was disappointed. There were many flaws in it and several drawbacks. He urged his friend to redesign the machine several times while he set about finding a market.

By 1872, Sholes had made great improvements on Lillian Sholes, daughter of the Wisconsin inventor of the typewriter, is seen working the machine that was called variously the "sewing machine of thought," the "literary piano" and "machine to replace the pen." This picture appeared in 1872 in the Scientific American his machine, such as the rotating roller to change the lines and the letter spacer. However, even then, the nickname "literary piano" applied. The typist still could not see what she was typing and the machine produced only capital letters.

Finding buyers was a major stumbling block, but Densmore kept trying. He even tried to manufacture the machine himself three different times and failed each time. His shops were forced to shut down. It was at this juncture that his contact and first contract was made with the Remingtons. The manufacture of the machines moved from Milwaukee to the arms plant in Ilion, N. Y.

Sholes was not the first inventor to attempt to build a writing machine. Already more than 20 men had tried such a machine, but had given it up.

It is conceded that had Sholes failed in his invention and his friend Densmore in his stubbornness to produce and sell, other men would have done it in time. The fact remains, however, that it was Christopher Latham Sholes and James Densmore who combined their efforts that led to a new concept in business and a sort of second industrial revolution. These two men also achieved some measure of earlier editorial dreams. The typewriter opened the way for dignified white collar jobs for women, a stepping stone in their backing of the feminine equal rights movement.

Black-Garbed Nun Throws Whirl

BY BOB WOESSNER
Post-Crescent News Service

MANITOWOC — A black-garbed Franciscan Sister who thinks schools should teach more than "Run, Fluff, run!" has been throwing some well-placed darts at a sacred cow. And she thinks she may finally have the lethargic animal on the move.

She is Sister Thomas More, who leads a Superman existence at Holy Family College at Manitowoc.

At the college she is an energetic assistant professor of history. She also handles public relations chores. But when she steps off-campus she becomes a whirlwind of well-directed and well-intentioned barbs aimed at the nation's farmers.

Surprisingly, the farmers seem to eat it up.

Sister Thomas More is an apostle of unity — federation, she calls it — on the farm front.

You've got to raise less corn and more hell, she tells her rural audiences.

Above all, you've got to get organized on a national level to speak with a unified voice in the halls of Congress and to the American public, she preaches.

But don't farmers have organizations like the Farm Bureau, the Grange, National Farmer's Union and National Farmers Organization?

Sure they do, she admits. But that's just the trouble. There are so many organizations — nearly 400 all told — that through disunity the farmer has abdicated his right to make policy which affects his production, his life, and his income.

The way out of all this is federation, she says.

"The role of farm organizations is placing food on the tables of the world," she points out. The emphasis is not on production, but on "placing" — the effective distribution of food products at a fair price.

"For distribution to be effective, it must be the result of carefully planned strategy. But strategy is the result of carefully-formed policy," she said.

Here her voice rises, becomes emphatic. Her eyes flash and she raps farm organizations as they are presently constituted. "They have been substituting slogans for policy for so long I'll bet there aren't many farmers that can tell the one from the other."

Effective policy means that farmers must become a political force and — "Farmers don't cut much ice in politics."

Don't blame farm politicians or city people, she says. "Your own disunity is the cause — but you are so busy sponsoring intramural boxing matches with other farm organizations you haven't had time to look at the record."

Farmers must be able to exert some control over the marketplace in which they sell their products if they are to gain a reasonable return for their labors.

The only way this can be done is through organization which gives the overall farming industry enough bargaining power to make its weight felt.

No Farm Spokesman

Control of the marketing situation, she argues, is also a political problem. But disunity in the farm ranks has created a vacuum, no one speaks for agriculture — and the government has stepped in with its own policies.

"You amuse me when you call Secretary Freeman (Secretary of Agriculture Orville Freeman) 'the czar of agriculture.'" If Orville Freeman becomes a czar, send yourself a thank-you card. You deserve it for creating the position."

Sister Thomas More also points to the existence of a big bloc (160 out of 400 agricultural organizations) made up of people engaged in the production or distribution of agricultural goods and services, but not directly in farming.

She said farm disunity makes it difficult for these people to make money or operate efficiently. As a result, she envisions, the groups are likely to force farmers to organize for their own ends.

The only path out of this morass is a federation — a national organization in which power is shared and balanced between local and central control.

Present farm organizations fail on several points, according to Sister Thomas More. Local units have little voice in policy, leadership is seldom renewed, and groups are only regional in scope.

Unitary Government

"Farmer organizations are structured like federations but they are not federations. They are unitary governments. All power rests at the top. Farm organizations are 'tyrannies without a tyrant,'" she said.

The federation she proposes — an American farmer federation — would unite the four major farm groups active today along with cooperatives, commodity groups, low-income farmers, and a group of sharecroppers, migrants, and farm laborers.

This will provide unity at the top and strength at the grass roots, she argues.

It is not an easy job, the bespectacled nun realizes. But she has hopes that some effort toward unity is under way.

When she accepts an invitation to speak to a farm audience today, she does so only if the audience agrees to some of her conditions.

Copies of her speech and her plan are sent to a local committee of farm groups which must discuss them and use them as a basis for forming a local organization. She has had success with the idea in Minnesota and South Dakota and sees evidence in parts of Wisconsin that organizational efforts are being made.

"Previously there was nothing happening after

It's homework-time as Sr. Thomas More does additional research for a talk before a Midwest farm group.

People listen to her ideas on farm federations because she represents no special interest.

Wind of Darts at Nation's Farmers

my talks. People would get together, listen, count noses — but there was no action."

And if there is one thing she seems to thrive on, it's action and involvement.

She is not a farm girl herself, and admits that she stumbled onto the farm unity question almost by accident.

Born and raised in Ironwood, Mich., she worked four years in a grocery store before entering the convent. She has held teaching posts in Hollandtown, Chicago and Waukesha.

She holds masters and doctorate degrees from Catholic University in Washington. It was her search for a doctoral dissertation topic that led her into the farm arena.

"I didn't want to do something on the use of the comma in the Constitution," she explains. "An adviser suggested an agricultural topic — he said it would include economics, geography and history, which were the areas I was studying."

"I knew nothing about agriculture, but I went to the national archives and looked at the papers of the secretaries of agriculture. It was a real mess."

An agriculture department historian pointed out that little had been done in the history of farm organizations and suggested a critical work in the field.

"I came into this cold, but I've always been a disciple of 'want to do something.'"

Finally, her work completed, she attended a farm group meeting in 1964 where she heard questions asked as to why the farmer was not a potent political or economic force.

"Well, I knew a couple of reasons, outlined them and, by the time they let me have the floor, I had a speech written."

Speaks 28 Times

From there she developed her federation idea and has spoken on it throughout the Midwest. From August 1965 to August 1966 she presented her plan 28 times to various groups.

Sister Thomas More is quite democratic in handing out criticism of farm groups — everybody comes in for a share.

For example:

She sees the NFO as a group willing to stand up and talk. "They get the grass roots farmers on their feet. But they have not been careful in their selections of grass roots leadership and have used some Jimmy Hoffa tactics."

Farm Bureau, she says, is led by an ultraconservative, Charles Schuman, and others who are "making the organization" a picture of their own ideology.

"If the NFO is made up of farmers on the make, the bureau is made up of farmers who have it made," she said. The bureau had access to the ear of former Sec. Ezra Taft Benson, but "the other guy is at bat now."

The NFO concentrate its strength in "high risk" farm areas and has been characterized by "running to the government for help" with low interest loans.

The Grange is the senior citizen among farm groups. Its influence has followed the migration of New Englanders across the country. "A majority of its members are retired farmers. Why should they push for anything? They've turned it into a rural Kiwanis club."

She feels, however, that leadership in a national federation ought to come from the Grange on the basis of the group's historical heritage and its lack

she has made in getting her farm federation idea started, but she also confides that she has been "taking Metrecal nose drops to keep from getting a big head about the project."

of a bad name through involvement in present-day controversies.

Has her plan been criticized?

"Yes. Some farmers are afraid of the federation idea. They think it means more federal government. It doesn't but it shows that we have done a lousy job of teaching civics," she points out.

Has her nun's garb been a hindrance or a help?

"A help. People realize that I have nothing to gain from all this and represent no special-interest group."

This is all education, she points out:

"The farm is an extension of the classroom. Not all of our efforts have to be directed to the Negro and the inner city. There are other problems. We must see the needs of people in our environment."

"The teacher too long has been regarded as transferer of tradition. But teachers are in an ideal spot to guide changes which are inevitable."

"I've only been saying some things which needed to be said."

Asia Greet The New Year

The God of the Kitchen (right) ascends to heaven to report on the 23rd day of every 12th moon. (Sketches by Doreen Yen Hung Feng from "The Joy of Chinese Cooking," published by Grossett and Dunlap)

NOW that the Western world has recovered from the effects of New Year's Eve and preceding holidays, consider, if you will, the strain of one or two weeks' New Year's celebrations.

That is the length of time it takes a self-respecting Oriental to greet the New Year properly. There are, of course, rather profound differences in the methods of celebration.

Nineteen sixty-seven is the Year of the Ram in Asian countries. The ram denotes strength and, consequently, it should be a good year in Asia.

In the Orient, each year is named after an animal. Last year was the year of the horse.

The Lunar New Year begins the day of the new moon, in late January or early February. In China, 15 days after the new moon are considered part of the holiday.

Other Asiatic peoples celebrate the New Year for varying lengths of time. For example, in Vietnam the New Year holiday lasts a week.

This year, using a Gregorian calendar, Feb. 9 marks the beginning of the New Year.

Celebration of the holiday is steeped in tradition and superstition. Its observance coincides with the usual reserve and dignity characteristic of the Western stereotype of Oriental persons.

Traditions Revised

Ancient Chinese traditions would indicate that this year is the year 4665. The custom dates back to the Han dynasty. In recent years, however, the Chinese have recorded years from the founding of the Chinese Republic in 1912.

In China, the holiday will be celebrated for 15 days before Feb. 9. It is the most noteworthy holiday of the year and truly signifies a rebirth of both the physical and the spiritual phases of an Oriental's make-up.

The Vietnamese call their holiday "Tet." To overlook its observance or act in a non-traditional manner is considered highly improper.

Tet is a time for the ultimate practice of protocol. The first three days of the holiday are considered most important. During that time, families visit their in-laws and are treated to delicacies hoarded throughout the year.

With an eye toward propriety in all things, housewives clean their homes completely before the holiday. To do so during Tet would incur the wrath of gods and bring bad luck for the new year.

It is considered an insult to wear old clothing when one visits friends or relatives. The finest teas from Dalat, the "Imperial Valley" of Vietnam, are served and pipes filled with sweet tobacco are passed among friends.

Gifts are exchanged among blood relatives and close friends. The gifts are accepted with humility and treasured though they are not of great material worth. For instance, a bunch of tiny flowers brings delight to the elder female of a house.

A money gift, equivalent to about a penny, is considered extravagant to a child. The Vietnamese place far more importance on the symbolic nature of gift giving than they do on the gift's value.

In one real-life case, five workers in a Saigon print shop last year were given a pack of cigarettes to share. In a very formal manner, the foreman of the crew thanked the giver and carefully counted the cigarettes into five portions.

Deferred to Benefactor

During the following weeks, he made it a point to let his benefactor know each time he smoked one of the gifts.

The Chinese holiday places great emphasis on the importance of family strength and devotion. Five household gods are honored with rituals pre-dating the Christian era.

Offerings of flowers, fruits and sweets are placed before ancestral images and icons. When the celebration ends in China, the people meet in the streets for a Feast of the Lanterns. They form a parade led by a great dragon.

The Vietnamese, although many have become Christians, still hold to ancient traditions. Supposedly the good spirits report to the heavenly emperor of jade to give an account of the past year.

This means that all the good spirits are absent, leaving the people unprotected. Consequently, a bamboo pole or "cay neu" is set up in front of each house on the eve of Tet.

The pole is about 30 feet long and has attached to it ribbons, feathers and colored glass to ward off evil spirits. In some areas of Vietnam, lime powder is scattered around the houses.

Le Loi, Saigon's "street of flowers," will be filled with bouquets and market places in cities and rural villages will display treats not sold during the rest of the year.

Business draws to a standstill except among the unbelievers in Vietnam. Regardless of the importance of production, doors are locked for Tet.

There is another tradition that, in recent years, seems rather ludicrous. Oriental mandates for the New Year's celebration say that no anger must be shown and no acts of violence performed during the holiday season.

Beef cubes marinated in a spicy sauce

Gung Het Fet Toy... 4665

THOSE are joyful words that say "Happy New Year" in Chinese. They certainly are in season since the brand new Year of the Ram . . . 4665 . . . starts Thursday, Feb. 9. Just for fun . . . and certainly in the best interests of good dining . . . celebrate the Chinese New Year with a typical dinner at home. Borrow a few ideas from the 15-day Oriental celebration, then plan a little or big party. The egg roll, available ready-made in most markets, is necessary because it's the symbol of spring, representing the tomorrow that's just around the corner. Choose the entree from one of the two recipes today, both Oriental in style, one beef cubes and fried rice, the other chicken wings in sweet-sour sauce.

Remember that no authentic Chinese meal is complete without tea. Usually the Chinese never sweeten their tea, except at New Year's time to symbolize the sweetening of the year ahead. Dinner is topped off with a tidbit such as a piece of ginger or candy. This is given to the young fry in the family especially . . . and for good reason. It is in the sensible hope that out of the mouths of babes will come sweet words the whole year long.

Oriental Beef and Rice

$\frac{1}{2}$ cup soy sauce
3 teaspoons sugar

POST-CRESCENT FOOD EDITOR
Lillian Mackesy

2 tablespoons minced onion
1 teaspoon hot pepper sauce
2 teaspoons ground ginger
 $1\frac{1}{2}$ pounds beef, cut into cubes
2 teaspoons peanut oil
Toasted sesame seeds or finely chopped peanuts
Canned fried rice

Blend together soy sauce, sugar, onion, pepper sauce, ginger. Pour over beef cubes; marinate at least one hour. Heat peanut oil; add drained meat; cook two to five minutes, or until done to taste. Take care not to overcook, and stir meat constantly. Sprinkle with sesame seeds or chopped peanuts. Serve with bed of hot fried rice. To complete this meal, serve green peas, tea and almond cookies for dessert. The recipe serves four.

Chinese Chicken Wings

12 chicken wings
3 tablespoons butter
1 small onion, sliced

1 cup pineapple chunks
Pineapple syrup
Orange juice
 $\frac{1}{4}$ cup soy sauce
2 tablespoons brown sugar
1 tablespoon vinegar
1 teaspoon ginger
 $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon salt
 $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon mace
 $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon Tabasco
 $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon dry mustard
 $1\frac{1}{2}$ tablespoons cornstarch
Steamed rice

Fold tips of wings under to form a triangle. Melt butter in large skillet; add wings and onion; cook until wings are brown on both sides, about 10 minutes. Drain pineapple; reserve chunks. Measure syrup and add orange juice to make $1\frac{1}{4}$ cups liquid. Blend in soy sauce, sugar, vinegar, ginger, salt, mace, Tabasco and dry mustard; pour over chicken. Cover and simmer about 30 minutes or until tender, basting top pieces with liquid once or twice. Remove wings to hot platter. To thicken sauce, add a little cold water to cornstarch and blend in some of the hot liquid; add to liquid in skillet with pineapple chunks; stir and bring to a boil. Serve chicken wings and sauce with hot steamed rice.

Magic, Photography Perfectly Compatible As Twin Hobbies

BY IRVING DESFOR

Photography, as a hobby, is Number One in my life but right after it in Number 1½ position, is magic. The nice part of it is that the two hobbies are compatible and add pleasure and purpose to each other.

On the one hand, my photography could focus on a unique world as subject matter—magicians in action—and I became the official photographer of the Society of American Magicians. On the other hand, a photographic angle was incorporated in my performance of magic resulting in an individual approach called "Photo Magic."

Actually, photography is such a good mixer it can be added to any other hobby as well, from collecting Americana, Artifacts or Ants to charting the Zodiac, making the combination more interesting and valuable.

Auspicious Start

1967 got off to an auspicious start on my two-hobby front because I was able to photograph the New Year's Day all-magic show on Garry Moore's CBS television show. It featured Milbourne Christopher's disappearing elephant and brought Sorcar, India's most famous magician, with his spine-tingling illusion of sawing a woman in half. Then there were Virgil and Julie from Olympia, Wash., with their spectral Spirit Cabinet; Hollywood's Marvin Roy and his electrifying act with light bulbs and New York's Roy Benson with his zany legerdemain.

I made sure to secure permission in advance to photograph the dress rehearsal and taping of the show. I also made sure to get to the studio early enough to look for the best camera angle. I was offered a front row seat with an unobstructed view of the stage action but was advised there could be no changing of location once the show got under way.

After considering it, I chose instead a seat on the aisle further back. Why? Because it would enable me to include in my pictures the television atmosphere—cameras and crews, monitor, teleprompter, the overhead lighting. They framed the stage action dramatically, visually identified the event as taking place on TV and were far more worthwhile to each magician as a memento of this exciting experience.

Furthermore, by using a telephoto lens, close-ups could be obtained every so often to avoid the monotony of just one camera angle. To add still more variety, after the dress rehearsal I shifted my location to the balcony for the final taping of the show. Besides offering a new camera viewpoint, there was some freedom to move inconspicuously about. One of the rules of photographic etiquette when shooting at any public performance is that the photographer's actions must never interfere, distract or call attention to itself.

Two cameras were used to record the show in black-and-white and color. Having been warned that flash was not permitted, fast Tri-X (ASA 400) went into the Rollei and for color, T-100 Anscochrome (Tungsten ASA 100)—only two stops slower—was loaded into the Zeiss 35mm Contarex for use with normal, 25mm wide-angle and 135mm telephoto lenses.

Brilliant Color

Before the show began, meter readings were made on stage under the 3200K TV lights which was perfect for T color film. Exposures were 1/125th at f/5.6 for Tri-X film and 1/60th at f/4 for the T-100 Anscochrome. All films received normal processing and were just right. Particularly pleasing were the brilliant color renditions and it was my pleasure to share the results with most of the artists on the show before they took off for India, Olympia and home.

Here's hoping that photography's magic touches camera fan readers with comparable snap-happy success in 1967.

hints from Heloise

DEAR HELOISE: If your husband wears an extra large shirt, try this after ironing. Find a wire clothes hanger with a round tube on the bottom and no wire through the tube. Remove the tube, bend the hanger almost straight, and hang the shirt on it. No more wrinkles! Miriam Flores

Frankly, I didn't think it would work! But I looked through the closet until I found one of those hangers, and discovered it works perfectly! Heloise

NEAT AS A PIN DEAR HELOISE: Here is a way to make a

WALKER CARRY-ALL DEAR HELOISE: For the benefit of those who must use a walker—either temporarily or permanently—get a small, inexpensive bicycle basket. These can be purchased at almost any place that sells bicycles, and there will be a bracket to attach it to the top crossbar of your walker. To carry small objects, just put a hand towel in the bottom of the basket so they will not fall through. Small glass jars with screw tops can be used to carry any liquids without spilling. M. M. S.

HEAVY JEWELRY PROBLEM DEAR HELOISE: An adhesive-backed bandage applied to the under side of a lapel or the inside of a dress, where a heavy brooch or pin is to be worn, will keep such a pin from being lost. Pin through the material and the bandage, lock the little safety catch and forget it. It can't slip out. Helen L. * * * You're so right. Also, the bandage will lessen the chances of the heavy brooch tearing the material or causing it to sag. Heloise

SMART TEEN-AGERS DEAR HELOISE: We have four teen-age boys—all very "look-conscious" now. They have found that my light-holding hair spray does wonders for keeping their hair neatly groomed from morning until noon at school. Then a little clear water and a comb restores their neatness. Some of my friends first accepted this suggestion as though I had four sissies—which couldn't be more wrong—until they tried our idea. No more stained, greasy-gooky pillowcases, or grease-stained furniture and cushions . . . and no pasted-down grooming either! Marjorie S.

If you have a hint, problem or suggestion you'd like to share . . . write to Heloise in care of this newspaper.

HANG YOUR TABLECLOTHS! DEAR HELOISE: Absolutely elegant drapes can be made of damask tablecloths, dyed in rich colors, like cherry red! This advice is for people (like me) who find they use their fine damask cloths once in four years. Audrey Hoyt Johnson

DECORATE YOUR CAST DEAR HELOISE: Here is a suggestion for people wearing a cast: I invited friends to help me paint colorful seasonal designs (flowers, butterflies, modern art, etc.) on my cast, using felt marking pens. The pens are inexpensive and come in all colors. A plastic, machine-sewn boot with elastic around the top, slipped over the cast, protects it and the paint when taking a tub bath. I received many compliments on my artwork from friends AND strangers. Made wearing the cast ALMOST enjoyable! Gail Smith

HIGHWAY MAP MARKER DEAR HELOISE: Whenever we are going on a trip, my husband marks the routes on the road maps with a yellow felt marking pen. The yellow marking does not cover the route numbers. Mrs. Albert J. Watts

SILENT TV FOR BABY DEAR HELOISE: Have a small baby who wants to be entertained? Try sitting him in an infant seat in front of the TV. It will amuse him for one-half to three-quarters of an hour easily. And if mother's nerves are shattered, turn off the sound. The light and movement of the picture are usually enough to keep baby's interest. Just keep the brightness control turned down low. J. Patterson Financier Morgan No 'Robber Baron,' Says Biographer Edwin P. Hoyt Jr.

BY JOSEPH L. BENHAM

THE House of Morgan. By Edwin P. Hoyt Jr. Dodd, Mead. $6.95.

Hoyt's thesis is that the record needs to be set straight on the House of Morgan. History has not dealt fairly on many occasions with J. Pierpont and other members of the family, he feels, and he offers some convincing arguments.

"The Morgans are not really of the Robber Baron class," writes Hoyt. "The story of the Morgan family is very much the story of American business success, for one cannot say that the Morgans earned their huge fortune by exploiting natural resources or human beings."

Perhaps not. But the Morgans did have their weaknesses, and the reader may find himself wishing that they were treated with more objectivity in this otherwise interesting and well-researched book.

The author deals at near-exhaustive length with Pierpont Morgan's impressive success in pulling the Northern Pacific, New York Central, Southern and other railway systems out of the chaos of the Robber Baron days. But a harried commuter on the New Haven will not likely appreciate Hoyt's inclination to treat the collapse of this ambitious Morgan project with a comparative shrug.

Nor does it seem particularly objective to write at length of Jack Morgan's success in arranging financing for the French, British and other Allied governments in World War I and then to kiss off the Morgan promotion of tens of millions of dollars in ill-fated Russian czarist bonds with one sentence.

Hoyt's most valuable service to the reader, despite some of his weaknesses, is to bring the entire House of Morgan into something akin to historical perspective, moving Junius (Pierpont's father) and Jack (Pierpont's son) out of shadow and into the spotlight in their own well-earned right.

Predictably, the dominant figure in the story is Pierpont Morgan, and as much as we see of him is fascinating. But the author is intent on Morgan the public man, leaving the reader with occasional and not altogether satisfactory glimpses of the inner and private man.

Balanced against the muckrakers' accounts, this report on the Morgans stands up well. But taken solely on its own merits, it could be better.

Inside South America. By John Gunther. Harper. $7.95.

Gunther rides again. Or more accurately, flies again.

He has taken a long trip through 10 countries of South America, combed through a mountain of books, documents and clippings, and has come up with his eighth "Inside" book. For the 10 countries, this replaces his Latin American book of 25 years ago.

The Gunther formula probably is unique. He is no plodding, fusty historian; nor is he entirely the self-promoting explorer.

He produces an odd blend of geography, history, commercial statistics, thumbnail sketches of political figures, tourist tips (don't drink the water), summaries of literary, educational, religious and cultural movements and a host of odd facts (the varieties of orchids in a given spot, the lack of oxygen at La Paz).

This mass of information he enlivens with his personal impressions of heads of state (authors, archbishops, peasants and taxi drivers). He tells you what he ate and drank, where he went and how, what he saw and heard, how he felt—and don't underestimate his ability to describe these episodes.

He also ticks off in quick, convenient, A-B-C fashion his conclusions, and attaches capsule summaries.

He is not timid about generalizing. For example in his concluding chapter, after surveying South America's size, aspirations, poverty and need for development, he trumpets that this is "a continent on the brink of revolution. A genuine pre-revolutionary pattern has been reached."

In the past Gunther's critics have chided him for giving quick, facile and superficial summaries. In this volume he has attached a husky addendum of footnotes and bibliography.

As the author rightly says, North Americans long have taken South America for granted—yawn. But he earnestly has struggled here to arouse their interest.

This is a typical Gunther book, and perhaps his principal gift is for the crisp, telling phrase that illuminates, and for the image or metaphor that captures a concept in a flash.

Lucinderella. By Berry Fleming. John Day. $4.50.

The comic muse runs amok in this farcical bit of fiction about eccentrics in a Southern town.

It seems that the heroine, variously known as Lucinda, Lucy and Lucinderella, a scrawny, unprepossessing youngster, had fled north to that den of iniquity, New York City, and had tapped out on her typewriter some popular novels—including one that was made into a Broadway play—about her hometown relatives and friends.

Having acquired enough brittle fame to last for a while, Lucy decides she is written out—or did she get that notion from her headshrinker?—and comes back home to seek calm.

Calm is about the last thing you would expect from the old homestead, which is a sort of free refuge set up by an ancestor, and populated by an assortment of kooky eccentrics from all branches of the family.

Or has Lucy really come back to gather material for another best seller? It seems that she has the knack of making her fictional characters seem more real than the live people she models them from.

The idea of being an author's puppet really bugs the narrator of this tale, Clamp Spignor, one of the inhabitants of the homesteady loony bin. Good old bachelor Clamp, being a bit naive, thinks he has a chance to romance this erratic witch of an author. But he is hopelessly lost, poor guy.

Here is a funny story about very funny people, and incidentally—an amusing look at the contrasts between the Old South and the newly urbanized, manufacturing South. You're entertained by a huge cast of crazy characters.

Spain in America. By Charles Gibson. Harper. $6.95.

For most Americans, the history of the New World begins with the Pilgrim Fathers, winds its way through the Boston Tea Party to Washington, Jefferson and Lincoln and then flows on to Lyndon Johnson. We are only irregularly aware that something was happening, in the meantime, in the far south.

But Spain was in America a century before the Pilgrims and played out its hand in parts of both hemispheres. Prof. Gibson's scholarly little book is a useful antidote against cultural myopia.

Like all colonial powers except one so far, Spain failed ultimately. It failed more resoundingly than others because its institutional and administrative capacities were not well adapted to a permanent imperial tenure. Yet its record in the New World as Gibson notes, is not all bleak.

The crown exerted itself to restrain colonial grandees, to mitigate the effects of the nefarious encomiando system—a semi-feudal transplant—and to look after the spiritual needs of the Indians. (Their material satisfactions were less indulged; between the conquest and the 17th century, the Indian population dropped from 50 million to around 3.5 millions.)

Gibson analyzes the major elements of the colonial system, the rulers, the ruled, the crown, the church, and the social and economic landscape. He does so with admirable clarity and detachment. What emerges is a varied drama with occasional humane triumphs, numerous human failures and the final negative verdict which no colonial system can escape.

His Life Free of 'Originalities,' Novelist Resembles Man Next Door

BY PIERO GARZAROLLI

ROME (AP)—"People think that a writer and a confused, disorderly life should go together like sugar and coffee," say Alberto Moravia. "My life instead is empty of originalities. I live practically like the man next door."

Yet the existence of Italy's most successful and internationally known author is anything but routine. He works only three and a half hours a day, travels extensively and enjoys Rome's night life.

"I wake up around 7 o'clock," he said in a recent Moravia, looking back on a career that includes such famous novels as "La Romana," "Roman Tales," "The Indifferents" and "Empty Canvas," says every work is slow and painstaking.

"The process of creation is so mysterious that the first outline of a page practically never resembles the finished product," he said. "I correct, I change, I throw away, I never feel entirely satisfied with what I have written."

Neither have some other people. He was brought to trial twice in Italy for writing allegedly obscene books—which he denies.

"I got out both times," he recalled, "because only a true artist can define the boundaries beyond which sex becomes pornography. A sick man can get excited by reading the Bible, or any other book, but only an artist can write in a clean way about sex because, let's face it, sex is a very important thing in our lives, perhaps the most important, something none of us can ignore any longer."

Recently Moravia has branched out into playwriting. Two of his plays, "The World Is What It Is" and "The Interview," opened recently in Venice and Rome to mixed reviews.

"I write for the theater because novel writing is undergoing a period of crisis," he said. "Too few people read in Italy, or if they read, they read the wrong things. I need to get my words across to them and the theater is my momentary tool. Then, if things go better, I shall return to my books. I already plan to write one in 1967—with my usual lazy schedule, of course."

Alberto Moravia
The Man Next Door . . . ?

interview in his flat overlooking the slowly flowing Tiber River on the outskirts of the city.

"I breakfast in bed—that's really wonderful and cozy—then I sit at my table from half past 8 until around noon.

"I type. I think, I take notes, make sketches. jot ideas. In short, I dream.

"Often I just sit there, waiting for an inspiration. It's like somebody expecting visitors. He does not know when they will arrive but he must keep his home clean and ready for them.

"That's my working schedule."

Moravia never works during other parts of the day, despite his vocations as novelist, journalist, movie critic and more recently, playwright.

"I spend the rest of the day reading, walking around the city, seeing friends, chatting, debating (he describes himself politically as a "leftist European"), going to dinner and to the movies. I love the night and staying up late."

He also loves to travel. He has visited the United States, England, Cuba, the Soviet Union and the Far East, writing from each country for Milan's influential daily, "Corriere della Sera."

He is the author of 18 books, translated into 29 languages, and his name is often mentioned in connection with a possible Nobel literature prize.

His boyhood gave no hint of his future intense activity or fame. He was sickly and never finished high school. Today, at 59, Moravia is healthy and sun-tanned, and shows only a limp for the 10 youthful years he spent bedridden with bone tuberculosis.

Though his daily schedule now seems leisurely,

Here's Honest Book For Honest Fishermen

Complete Book of Bass Fishing. By Grits Gresham. Harper and Row. $5.95.

One might think that because there are no honest fishermen there can be no honest books about fishing. But the "Complete Book of Bass Fishing" by Grits Gresham is an exception.

Gresham touches all the bass bases in a factually written and well illustrated, 264-page book which instructs rather than "cons" the reader. The lures, the tackle, the places, the times, the techniques and most importantly the bass themselves are accurately discussed and portrayed. The beginning bass fisherman will learn from it, the accomplished catcher of either largemouth or smallmouth bass will be interested in comparing notes with the author and will find that in most cases they are in agreement.

If there is a weakness in the book, at least for Wisconsin consumers, it is the fact that for the most part the volume is regional. For Gresham, a past president of the Outdoor Writers Association of America and a syndicated columnist in 30 Louisiana newspapers, is as deep south as his pen-name, "Grits."

But this is part and parcel of the basic honesty of the book . . . Gresham, for example, doesn't claim catches of lunker bass every time he goes out . . . for the author sticks with what he knows best rather than posing as a universal expert. And besides, whether done in the artificial impoundments of the south, or the backwaters and bays of the northern lakes, bass basics are pretty much the same.

Truce Organization

U.N. Safety Valve Guards Middle East

JERUSALEM (AP) — The United Nations has two safety valves for keeping Israeli-Arab hatred from blowing the lid in the Middle East.

Israeli-Syrian border strife has turned the spotlight recently on UNTSO, the U.N. Truce Supervisory Organization, made up of 133 military men and 280 civilians which operates on all the borders of Jordan, Syria, Lebanon and Egypt with Israel.

It is an observer operation and not a peacekeeping force, like UNEF — the U.N. Emergency Force of about 3,700 men acting as a buffer along the Israeli-Egyptian armistice demarcation line, in the Gaza Strip and at Sharm El Sheikh at the AP correspondents both in Arab-controlled and Israeli-controlled areas went into the field to see how UNTSO and UNEF operate, to talk with the men and their commanders about their day-to-day duties and living.

Life is pretty dull for the men of UNEF, which has been an effective restraining influence since its creation after the 1956 crisis set off by the Israeli-French-British attack on Egypt. While there are lulls in the work of UNTSO, the nature of their duties makes the work more challenging — and also more frustrating.

Sharply Critical

Maj. Gen. Carl C. Von Horn, a Swede who served as a UNTSO commander in 1958-60, charged in his book "Soldiering for Peace" last October that some UN personnel were engaged in smuggling and black market operations. He was sharply critical also of high U.N. officials in New York.

He declared that Israel released girls from military service to entertain U.N. personnel but that "enlistment for Israel's cause that took place between the sheets are second to systematic, organized corruption."

He said that U.N. officialdom in New York had foggy ideas about reality, and responded angrily to criticism.

There was no comment from Secretary-General U. Thant or other high officials. The U.N. has reported some cases of arms smuggling in the Congo and among the U.N. peacekeeping force in Cyprus, but not in UNTSO or UNEF.

The book was received with delight in the Arab world, and was published in installments in several newspapers. Arab officials in Lebanon and Jordan, asked about charges in the book, say merely that UNTSO teams are doing a good job.

Said King Hussein of Jordan, "I suppose that, as in every organization, there are good men and bad. But they (UNTSO) are doing their job very well."

A Scandinavian officer with UNTSO is the Arab sector told a reporter:

Offered Money

"I have been offered money many times, by people on both sides. I think all of us have. But the money has never been offered to sway my opinions in U.N. reporting. It has been offered for personal favors — to carry a message across to a friend in the Israeli side, or to take a gift across to an Arab family. But accepting a bribe for a personal favor could even get you into deeper things."

UN people on the Israeli side disclaim any knowledge of smuggling activities or offers to act as couriers for either side. The Israelis express belief that minor violations could occur "since U.N. soldiers are only human."

Civilian and military personnel in UNTSO come from 36 countries, with the military men assigned from 12 — Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Netherlands, Ireland, Italy, France, Canada, New Zealand, Australia, Belgium and the United States.

Many have their families with them although the United Nations provides no housing, accommodation or special allowances for families. Officers and civilians are free to decide whether to live on the Arab or the Israeli side. But it appears that the United Nations tries to maintain some kind of balance. UNTSO officers mix freely in the communities where they live, and wear uniforms only when on duty. They are present at receptions, parties, diplomatic and government affairs.

Daily Allowance

The United Nations pays each UNTSO officer a $10 daily subsistence allowance. All other expenses are covered by their own government, including salary and living costs for himself and family.

"I have been here for years, regular U.N. budget. For 1967 and I have learned some of the languages of both sides and I have both Arab and Jewish friends," commented one UNTSO officer.

"But I feel completely imparthe Middle East. It is currently on the Israeli-Syrian frontier that tempers are the hottest, the incidents most frequent, and the lives of UNTSO officers most endangered.

Their efforts on this sector prompted U. Thant to say recently that in countless instances UNTSO has stopped fighting and prevented it from escalating into a fullscale war.

About half the UNTSO observers are assigned to the Syrian-Israeli frontier. On the Syrian side, on high ground overlooking the demilitarized zone, they have built six observation huts. There are four observation posts on the Israeli side, including an old Israeli club building at Tiberias. Teams of observers spend a few days at a post, then are rotated.

Almost Everyone Likes Golden Calla, Member of Arum Family

BY KATHERINE B. WALKER

I HAVE known many people who don't like the big white calla, Zantedeschia aetheopica, used by florists in very formal arrangements. I have known several people, who, like me, don't care for the so-called Black Calla, Arum palaestinum. But I have yet to meet the person who wouldn't cherish the Golden Calla, Zantedeschia eliotiana. (Both of the above genera belong to the Arum Family. They are not lilies, bear no resemblance to them, and the name "lily" should not be tacked on to correct name, calla.)

Golden callas take their name from the full, deep yellow color of the flaring spathe which we call the flower. But in addition to the beauty of their blossoms, these plants also have gorgeous foliage. The large, bright green leaves have translucent white spots of various sizes scattered haphazardly over the surface. This odd characteristic is particularly charming since it makes the leaves lovely to look at both fore and aft. While other callas are fairly attractive, especially when in flower, in my opinion the Golden Calla is superb from the time the first leaf appears.

Callas grow from rhizomes, and are among the easiest of all tuberous or rhizomatous plants to bring into flower. In the fall, you will find rhizomes in most garden shops, either loose in a bin or sealed neatly in a box or bag. I prefer to select from the bins, as then I can be sure the ones I choose are firm, with perhaps just a touch of color at the growing points.

Put the rhizomes as deep as possible in a six or eight-inch pot, using rich, loamy soil; water them well, then place the pot in a moderately warm, shaded spot. Keep the soil only slightly moist until growth begins, then keep it almost wet. After the plant has flowered, gradually reduce watering until the soil is quite dry. Remove the dried foliage, and store the rhizome in its pot in a dark, moderately cool place.

After a couple of months, the rhizomes can be repotted in fresh soil, using a larger pot if this seems necessary, and started into growth again. I usually prefer to let my callas "wake up" by themselves; then, when growth begins, I repot them and begin heavy watering.

By giving good care during the growing periods, including regular but dilute applications of a well-balanced plant food, proper drying off and resting after flowering, most Golden Callas can be brought into bloom twice a year without difficulty.

Questions and Answers

Q. I have a billbergia called Queen's Tears, potted in coarse leafmold and kept in a bright, partially sunny place. Whenever the soil seems to be going dry, I dunk the whole pot and plant in a tub of water. So far, I haven't had any flowers. What do I look for to find a sign of buds, and how can I hasten this?

A. You are giving your plant excellent care, so bloom should appear soon. Look into the very center of the rosette of leaves; if there is a fat cluster of what looks to be leaves, this is the beginning of the flower spike.

Q. My rubber plant had leaves over a foot and a half long when I got it. Now the new ones are less than eight inches in length. What's wrong?

A. Your plant probably needs much more light, perhaps more watering, and possibly a little plant food. Do send 20 cents in coin plus a self-addressed, stamped envelope to me, in care of this newspaper, for our little Rubber Plant booklet. It will answer any questions you may have about this plant.

Q. My little lemon and orange plants seem healthy, but they keep dropping their flowers instead of setting fruit. How can this be avoided?

A. Flowers that have not been properly fertilized cannot give rise to fruit. If insects are not present, cross-pollination may be done by hand, transferring the pollen from the anthers into the stigmas.

Q. Can you send me a list of all the different African violets?

A. Sorry, but we don't have such a list. To keep up with what's new (and old) in the African violet world, join a chapter of their Society.

Marble-Size Tomatoes Uncommon

BY EARL ARONSON

Recently, there was a story about a "potato-tomato" plant grown by Mrs. J. P. Sutton of Nashville, Ga. The plant had potatoes underground and on the vines what appeared to be "small tomatoes about the size of marbles."

W. E. Sanderson of Loudonville, N.Y., who has been interested in gardening for more than 70 years, wrote a letter to Mrs. Sutton volunteering information about "what is known as potato balls or potato apples."

"When some potato plants are protected from insects they grow profusely and flower," Sanderson related. "If these flowers are fertilized they will produce a fruit of seeds which could be likened to a small tomato with seeds. If these seeds are planted, after a few generations, a new variety of potato results."

This type of growth is rather uncommon, Sanderson explained, since most fields of potatoes are attacked by insects that destroy the blossom and its fertility.

What This Country Needs Is Better Garden Magazines

BY UNCLE JACK

There was once a vice president of the United States who earned a little place in the history of his times in spite of the anonymity of that office by declaring that what the country needed was a good 5 cent cigar.

I'm not sure what recalled the incident to memory when I was reading at the fireside the other night, but it occurred to me there are probably many gardening fans besides myself who would remark that what American gardening needs is better horticultural periodicals.

I am an avid subscriber to gardening magazines and specialty association organs. My conclusion after some years of faithful reading is that most of their editors are missing the boat, if a mixed metaphor may be pardoned. Their assumptions are wrong. Their policies are based on the belief that most of their subscribers are beginners.

They repeat the ABC's endlessly, so that a typical reader can pick up a February issue of any year and find the same wearying schedule of spring-typed reports on the delights of home grown sweet corn, the beauty of the back yard tomato vine, the sweetness of home grown peas, ad infinitum.

Some of the repetitive scheduling is necessary, I know. It is a characteristic also of the outdoors periodicals with their succession of "how I caught my lunger" and similar pieces, and of the golf magazines and others.

But I wish these editors would remember that there are those more senior gardeners who have learned the essentials, and who want to know something about developments in chemistry, soil management, and plant breeding, and the myriad of technical conquests that relate to their avocation. If any reader asked for my own choice of the superior periodical on horticulture now being published in America, I would nominate the monthly organ of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, called Horticulture, for its consistent recognition of its readers as serious and intelligent adults, its brilliant enterprise in seeking out authors with something to say, and its magnificent photography.

Sanderson said the potato balls are not a phenomenon. They really are the seed pods of the source of new varieties of potatoes from experiment stations.

If you are using leaves (use healthy ones only) for compost, mix in a small amount of soil to improve the compost. In a couple of years the leaf mold will enrich your garden. Leaves high in mineral content are ash, sugar maple, tulip and basswood.

"At Home With Plants," by Elsie Lee (Macmillan Co.) is a guide to fruitful indoor gardening—for those who will settle for a pot instead of a plot. The book itemizes plants, then advises about feeding, watering, light and general care. There are many photographs.

"Daffodils Are Dangerous," By Hubert Creekmore (Walker & Co.) tells about the many poisonous plants in your garden. You may have suffered a minor or a serious poisoning without realizing the source was something you considered a harmless plant. You'll be surprised to know some of the sources of poison.

'Animated Snowdrift' Takes Name From France's Lofty Pyrenees Peaks

BY BUD LARIMER

THE British call him the Pyrenean mountain dog; the French, Le Grand Chien Des Montagnes or Chien des Pyrenees. In the United States he is the Great Pyrenees, that "animated snowdrift." This majestic dog takes his name from the mountains along the French-Spanish border, where for centuries he has guarded shepherd's flocks and homes, carried packs and pulled carts.

Like most members of the mastiff family, the Great Pyrenees has a proud and ancient history. His ancestors, probably migrants from Central Asia or Siberia, left identifiable remains in Bronze Age deposits more than 3,000 years ago. Even earlier, Babylonians pictured huge dogs resembling the present breed.

In the snowy Pyrenees, the breed developed in centuries of isolation as a shepherd's companion. Armored with a spike collar and his own long, thick coat, the huge and powerful dog patrolled high mountain pastures. Shepherds relied on him to battle wolves and bears, and often left him in sole charge of the flocks. Their confidence was justified; early writers, struck by the breed's courage, sometimes called it the Pyrenean wolfhound or bearhound. As predators declined, the Great Pyrenees took on general guard and draft work.

The Great Pyrenees
Ch. Soleil Louis le Cuddly

French nobility early saw the virtues of the mountain peasant's breed, and brands of these dogs guarded many large chateaux. Medieval sculptures of the royal coat of arms bears its likeness, and in the reign of Louis XIV the "White Furred Lords" became the fashion at court.

The Great Pyrenees apparently sailed aboard 17th century Basque fishing boats to Newfoundland, where the colonists crossed it with a probable curly-coated retriever to develop into what became our present Newfoundland. The Pyrenees also evidences strong strains of St. Bernard blood.

The Great Pyrenees first reached the United States when General Lafayette gave a pair to an American friend in 1824, describing them as "of inestimable value to wool growers in all regions exposed to the depredations of wolves and sheep killing dogs." Few others were imported until 1933, the year that the breed gained American Kennel Club recognition.

The breed's herculean size and strength equip him admirably as a pack dog. Border smugglers so used him for many years between France and Spain. Some saw service in World War I, and the United States trained a few in World War II as carriers of machine guns, ammunition and supplies.

Soundness weighs most heavily when judging this impressive breed. His broad, straight back and capacious chest evolved through centuries of arduous mountain work. His massive, wedge-shaped head curiously resembles the bear he once fought. Double dewclaws on each hind leg are a mark of the breed. His flat, snowy coat is sometimes marked with badger-gray or tan.

A fine, trustworthy dog with children, the Great Pyrenees guards his modern master and his home with the same loyalty and devotion that he gave these mountain shepherds centuries ago.

Examples of the breed may stand from 25 to 32 inches at the shoulder and will weigh from 90 to 125 pounds.

A unique dog insurance policy covering accident, theft and loss of life, is now available to dog owners joining the Dog Owners Guidance Service Association, Inc.

Under the new membership plan, for $5 a year dues, members not only receive pet insurance but also obtain complete protective services for their dogs.

This includes protection against dognapping through the use of a warning protective medallion cautioning potential dognappers that the animal is protected by the William J. Burns Detective Agency.

In addition, the member's dog is registered in a central identification register, where his vital statistics are available for ready reference in case he is lost or stolen.

For the same five dollar dues, members also receive dog guidance manuals, free dog care guidance, a monthly newsletter full of information for dog owners and membership credentials which include a sticker for car or home window.

Splendid Normandie Deserved a Nobler Destiny Than Fire

BY W. R. DOBERSTEIN

You don't have to have had a grandfather who graduated from Annapolis or an uncle who was a ship's captain to have a feeling for the vessels which have appeared on postage stamps. In fact, you could be an ex-cavalry man with a special attitude about "the Sherman" tank, or even a former Air Force man with a fond regard for the B-25 Mitchell — like myself — and still be fascinated by ships on stamps.

It was bumping into a nearly forgotten bit of history which recalled for me a lasting fondness for a particular ship stamp. Though far less dramatic than the "Titanic" disaster, it was a miserable February day 25 years ago when the former French liner "Normandie" was gutted by fire at a New York harbor pier and capsized while being fitted out as a transport ship.

What made it even more tragic — beyond the fact that sea tonnage was badly needed at this critical time — was that such an extraordinary vessel as the Normandie should have enjoyed a short six years as the luxury liner she was conceived to be before being fitted out as a troop transport.

A Dismal Fate

A ship for which France would issue a special stamp deserved a nobler destiny. To a very young boy who treasured in his collection the stamp depicting this noble vessel, it would have seemed a dismal event indeed.

But there are many famous ships portrayed on stamps. There are fighting ships of different eras. There are classic types — like early steamships still fitted with masts and sails (just in case, or to economize by utilizing favorable winds). There are Viking ships, and schooners, and frigates and barks and brigantines and men-o'-war and galleys and triremes. There are cruisers and destroyers and battleships and corvettes. There are junks and feluccas.

There's H.M.S. "Dounty" and U.S.S. "Missouri" and "Constitution" and "Bon Homme Richard" and "Half Moon" and "Savannah" and Clermont" and dozens of others to excite the historian and the student. Together, they provide an array of some of mankind's boldest activities. They need only be joined with the bold men who stood on their decks to tell a story so big it encompasses a massive portion of all the volumes ever written.

But famous "sailors" must be the focus of an entirely different subject of stampic "stories." We'll meet them philatelically another time.

Bridge Games in Strange Places, Part of Every Player's Memories

BY ALFRED SHEINWOLD

If you've played bridge for many years you're bound to remember games in strange places or at strange times. One of my own peculiar games was played in a C-46 going across the Himalaya Mountains into China during World War II. Our oxygen masks made us look like monsters from another planet, and the quality of the bridge matched our appearance.

I added another strange place to my little list last year when I played bridge at the Bermuda Inn, not far from Los Angeles. Not an ordinary resort, the Bermuda Inn accepts only guests who want to take off weight. You spend most of your time there playing bridge absentmindedly with equally distracted friends. Everybody has half of his mind on the game and the other half on the next serving of carrots or celery. At the rate of 100 calories per day you can't eat many carrots.

Oddly enough, you really stick to a diet in such a place. Even if you raid the icebox at home and then lie shamelessly about how little you eat, you consider it unethical to lie to the other players in your bridge game. The doctors consider it a type of group therapy, but it's actually just a proof that bridge players are very ethical.

Since bridge players spend too much time sitting down to keep their figures (a poor excuse, but better than none at all), the Inn has catered—if that is the word—to a surprising number of bridge experts. A few weeks before my visit Charles Goren had spent some time there, and the Inn has also accommodated Ernie Rovere, San Francisco author and teacher, and George Gooden, another well-known Californian lecturer and bridge teacher.

If you're wondering what reducing has to do with bridge, today's hand will answer your question. There are times when a bridge player must get rid of the excess fat to stay out of his own way.

West might not have doubled with K-Q-2 of spades, but the nine reassured him. Even if dummy turned up with the ace of spades, South would surely have both the jack and ten for his opening bid of two spades. West would surely get his two trump tricks, and the double would bring in an additional hundred points.

West opened the jack of clubs, and South saw that West could not have anything resembling a double of six spades unless he had the three missing trumps. If West had not doubled, South might have led the ace of spades at the second trick; or I might have been cautious enough to lead a diamond to dummy in order to lead a trump through East. Either way, South would have gone down.

The double warned South to reduce. He took the first trick with the ace of clubs and led the king of hearts in the hope of getting a count. East carefully began a high-low by playing the nine of hearts since, from his point of view, the information might be important to his partner.

South continued with the ace of hearts and the king of clubs; and then led a diamond to dummy ace. He ruffed a heart, discovering that East followed suit after his high-low. This revealed that East had been signalling to show four hearts.

South got to dummy by ruffing a good diamond and ruffed a club. He ruffed another good diamond in dummy and ruffed the good queen of clubs. This reduced South's trump length to a very stylish shape—the A-J-10. Meanwhile West had followed suit to each trick and was likewise reduced to three trumps—but on him it didn't look good.

At last South could afford to lead a trump. He led the jack of trumps, and West could take the queen—but then had to return a trump from the K-9 to South's A-10.

South made his slam by reducing to the same number of trumps as West. Otherwise South would have been obliged to lead trumps early, and West would take one trump trick and get out safely by leading any side suit.

Stamp to Honor Runaway Slave

BY SYD KRONISH

Frederick Douglass, the runaway slave who rose to become a distinguished editor and diplomat, will be honored on a U.S. 25-cent stamp with first-day ceremonies in Washington on Feb. 14. The issuance of the new stamp will coincide with Negro History Week.

Born Frederick Augustus Washington Bailey on Col. Ed Lloyd's Maryland plantation, the slave fled to New Bedford, Mass., where he changed his name to Douglass to avoid detection. He took his name in admiration for the character in Sir Walter Scott's "Lady of the Lake."

For 17 years Douglass edited an abolitionist newspaper, "The North Star," in Rochester, N.Y. Later he was named marshal and recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia and minister to Haiti. Abraham Lincoln's widow gave Douglass the President's favorite walking stick as a memento of the respect the men had for each other.

The 25-cent Douglass stamp is in the "Prominent

FREDERICK DOUGLASS

Americans" series of regular stamps. Collectors desiring first-day cancellations may send addressed envelopes together with remittance to cover the cost of the stamps to be affixed, to the Postmaster, Washington, D.C. 20013. The envelope to the Postmaster should be endorsed "First Day Covers 25-cent Frederick Douglass Stamp." Requests must be postmarked no later than Feb. 14.

The Appleton Layers

The "Appleton layers" do not refer to local pullets
That lay small eggs for our receptive gullets;
Nor to those Appletonian gentlemen
Who lay down carpets, floors or cement.
These I regret to say, are not the lay-ers that are meant.
(Of course their value goes without saying, Although our verses do not deal primarily with their type of laying.)

We refer to important layers in our upper atmosphere
That reflect radio waves from the ionosphere,
Many miles above our stratosphere.

So these strata are of value to me and you,
And do accomplish certain things that no Wisconsin hen could ever do (Although the latter are highly productive too).

The question may be asked — "Were these named for our town?"
Well, folks. I hate to let you down.
They carry the name of the physicist son
Of a proud British father named APPLETON.

Cities Gather Forces in Fight For Equitable Share of Taxes

(Editor's Note: The following is a speech given by Mayor Henry Maier of Milwaukee before a Sheboygan Service club. Because the subject is of keen interest to Fox Cities communities, it is being run in its entirety.)

Not too many years ago, anyone speaking to a group of this kind would have to say that the nation's number one domestic problem was agriculture.

No doubt we would have addressed ourselves to the question: How do we save the family farm?

But now the family farmer has moved to the city, and the family farm is rapidly becoming a nostalgic dream.

One hundred years ago, only 15 out of every 100 persons in Wisconsin lived in urban places. Today at least 66 out of every 100 live in urban places. By 1980, we can expect at least 71 out of every 100 to live in urban places.

In the 1950 census of Wisconsin, there were four standard metropolitan areas. In 1960 there were six.

Appleton Growth

Between the census of 1950 and the census of 1960, the city of Appleton grew by more than 42 per cent. The population of Janesville increased by a bit more than 41 per cent. That of Kenosha by almost 25 per cent. Racine by 25 per cent. Neenah by 45 per cent. Waukesha by 41 per cent. Sheboygan increased by over 7 per cent.

At a time when the population of most large central cities in the country was decreasing, the population of Milwaukee increased by 16.3 per cent.

The increase in Milwaukee's population was larger than the total population of Wisconsin's second largest city in 1950.

The march of urbanization in our state gobbles up hundreds and hundreds of acres each year. Often it is a rag-tag march, with natural splendor replaced by man-made squalor. Instead of orderly growth, we often find plain anarchy — disorderly urban sprawl around a central city hard-put to preserve its very life, much less its civilizing characteristics.

Today we have reached an era in Wisconsin where urban problems are state problems, and I submit that we need an increasing recognition of this fact at the state level. We have no greater task than to impress this fact upon our legislators, our senators, even some of our administrators and the people of this state.

Nor are the problems of urban America given sufficient recognition at the national level.

More Slum Dwellers

In this urban age we probably have more slum dwellers than farmers. Yet it's estimated that the federal government allocates about $1 to our cities for every $13 that are allocated to saving our farms.

We spend about as much in developing a single space shot as we spend in federal assistance to urban renewal.

We spend many more dollars in building highways between cities than we do on building the cities themselves.

We have now reached the

Mayor Henry Maier

point where our largest population centers are becoming the have-not communities of the state and of the nation.

Long looked upon as the rich uncles of this state, our cities are now the poor cousins.

On top of it all, here in Wisconsin, the central cities are starved by an antiquated system of state aids and shared taxes that fails to provide them with the resources they require for healthy growth and development. Taxes are collected on the basis of ability to pay, but not distributed on the basis of need.

This antiquated system of state aids and shared taxes perpetuates tax islands in the metropolitan area around the central city. In case after case, we find central cities struggling to survive while all around them are affluent suburbs.

Let me show you what I mean.

Wealthy Islands

The map shows average family income in the Milwaukee area. It illustrates how the resources, the money, is separated from the overriding needs of the community.

Notice that there are two tightly concentrated but widely separated groups. In the upper right hand corner of the map you see islands of green. In the center you see the cross-hatched areas in the red, the deficit areas of the poor.

In these dollar sign areas, families have an average income of $10,000 or more a year.

In the deficit area — an area which costs city taxpayers an estimated $9 million a year to service — the average family makes less than $5000 a year. This area, the only haven of the poor in metropolitan Milwaukee, is in the City of Milwaukee. In fact, the 1960 census showed that one out of nine families in the central city of Milwaukee had income of less than $3,000 a year.

Here's another of the burdens that the central city carries. This white square represents the number of acres in Milwaukee which are tax-exempt and which contain services for the entire metropolitan area.

This block does not include churches. But it does include such things as colleges, hospitals, women's clubs, airports and the like. Valued at just short of half a billion dollars, this tax-exempt property represents over three times the real estate values in the entire city of Sheboygan.

At our current tax rate, this property would add more than $5 million a year to the city of Milwaukee revenues — enough to clear 100 acres of slum, or pay for almost one-third of our police costs, or pay for practically all of our garbage collection and disposal.

My point is not to question the desirability of these tax-exempt services. I think they are fine and necessary. My point is that since they are concentrated in the central city, this increases the burden which the lowest income people carry on their back, although the services are claimed by everyone in the metropolitan area.

Still another burden carried on the backs of central city taxpayers are increased school costs. These are due primarily to the need for educating members of large low-income families which are, for the most part, zoned out of suburban areas.

The result is that the City of Milwaukee has to put off many of the things it needs right now to put things into top shape. These range from street maintenance to combatting Dutch elm disease. We can't afford them. We don't have the money. So we put them off.

Pollution Costs

Take water pollution. The State of Wisconsin has insisted that the City of Milwaukee, in the years ahead, must separate its storm and sanitary sewers. Experts tell us the bill could run as high as half a billion dollars. The city doesn't have that kind of money. It can't solve this problem without help from other levels of government.

In short, the more broadly based resources of the county, state and federal governments will have to be called into play if the central city is to survive as a dynamic service center for the metropolitan area.

This is why I began the great city crusade for resources last June.

The basic message I have taken throughout the city, the suburbs, the state and even other parts of the country, since that time is that the fate of the central city is really the fate of the metropolitan area — that the fate of the central city is really the fate of metropolitan Milwaukee.

I have sought allies for fiscal reform in other parts of the state and of the nation. It is the reason why I am here this afternoon.

Milwaukee no longer suffers alone the problems afflicting a regional center in this state. There are a number of Wisconsin cities in the same leaky boat, including Sheboygan, Appleton, Oshkosh, Fond du Lac, Neenah and Menasha. Together they are banding together with Milwaukee to pursue the question of fiscal justice for the central city.

Don't Bear Share

Each of these regional centers is surrounded by tax islands. Each serves vast areas which do not bear their share of the costs for metropolitan services performed by the central city. Each carries the burden of large amounts of tax-exempt property. Each has seen flight of industry and wealth to the suburbs which in turn speeded up decay and blight within its boundaries. And if they do not yet suffer all the problems of the larger cities it is merely a question of time.

The city's tax base in most cases has eroded while its property tax has gone up and up.

As New York's Mayor Lindsay puts it: the upper and middle income suburbs — in his words — "try to build a high wall to protect themselves from the city core. The major problem of the cities," he says "is to break down that wall, to make the suburban areas an integral part of the cities upon which they live." In other words, we must break down the wall that separates the resources of the community from its needs.

No, Milwaukee is no longer alone in this crusade for reform. Mayor Brown has the same basic problem here in Sheboygan as I do in Milwaukee. So does the mayor of Green Bay, the mayor of Oshkosh, the mayor of Appleton and the mayor of Kenosha. I dare say that there is not a single central city mayor in the state who does not have the same fundamental problem of how to obtain sufficient resources to meet overriding needs.

Depend on Cities

This is why tax reform to give more aid to the cities of Wisconsin should be the state's first order of business. The people of Wisconsin are dependent upon their cities now. If the state is to grow and prosper, then the fiscal barriers separating resources from needs must come tumbling down.

True, a portion of the state income tax is returned to the localities in which the taxpayer lives. But in the most affluent areas, incomes are so high that the state income tax return pays a much higher percentage of the costs of local government than in areas of lower income. Those who could best afford to pay higher property taxes are subsidized at the cost of the low income taxpayers usually found in the central city. For example, in the 18 Milwaukee county suburbs, state aids and shared taxes pay, on the average, 70 per cent of the costs of local government.

But if you live in the city of Milwaukee, state aids and shared taxes pay only 30.6 per cent of the costs of your government.

This is one of the reasons that a wealthy suburban school district can easily afford to spend $1,000 per pupil for public schools compared to Milwaukee's $600.

Nelson Saw Need

This is not a new subject in Wisconsin. It has been studied, restudied and studied again. And all of the studies have come to the same basic conclusion: Our cities are not getting the help that they need.

When Senator Nelson was governor, his blue ribbon committee stated bluntly: "The financial problems of our municipalities are far more acute out. No doubt there are many loyal and good women belonging to the league. These women have no idea that they are being duped. They do not comprehend the radical background and the dangerous part this super-international group is playing in its efforts to betray the basic principles that have made America great. The League aims its propaganda at uninformed citizens and seeks to stampede public officials into accepting without question its well-planned, cleverly presented, and cunningly disguised programs.

Fond du Lac and Oshkosh have fallen to the purveyors of one-world government. The allegiance of a city manager is always to the headquarters which spawned the monstrosity. And headquarters is on E. Wilson St., Chicago, Illinois. As a sidelight, the city manager need not be an American citizen to obtain and hold his position!

The League of Women Voters, Chamber of Commerce, and the Oshkosh Daily Northwestern have all supported this vicious form of local government which rewards the favored and relegates the taxpayer to a second-class citizen. Of course, it is our esteemed privilege to pay off the enormous debts and ever-higher taxes while ignoring all petitions on the "father knows best" theory.

Seven councilmen are elected "at large" (another way to take away direct government) in Oshkosh which leaves the control in the hands of four

than those of the state government itself."

Milwaukee will make some proposals at the current session of the state legislature. The effect of these proposals on the central cities in the state are — although in preliminary form — shown on the sheet which has been passed out to you. These figures have been compiled by our new city department of intergovernmental fiscal liaison.

As you can readily see, every one of the 21 largest cities in the state could expect to benefit under our proposals.

Sheboygan, for instance, would get almost $70,000 more under our proposals than it would receive under the present system of shared taxes. Fond du Lac, Oshkosh and Appleton all would get over $100,000 more. Neenah would get almost $60,000 in addition with Menasha receiving upwards of $22,000 more. Even Green Bay, despite its large utility company holdings, would receive $35,000 more than it receives under the present system.

A glaring example of the unfairness of the present method of districting utility taxes is the proposed new atomic generating plant in the town of Two Creeks in nearby Manitowoc County. The town of Two Creeks presently levies local taxes amounting to about $60,000.

Two Creeks Prospects

The estimated cost of the new plant is $65 million. On this basis the town of Two Creeks will receive about $800,000 a year in utility taxes collected by the state.

That represents about $2,000 for every man, woman and child in the town of Two Creeks. They'll have to build a new town hall with an attached warehouse just to store the money.

One of the proposals seeks to correct glaring inequities in the present method of distributing the state utility tax. Another set is aimed at relieving property taxes in high-tax areas.

Taken into account in these figures is the $2 million which the governor pledged in his state of the state address to restore to the property tax relief fund. This money would be taken from the state's general fund.

The figures reflect a proposed change in the distribution of the utility tax. Under our proposal some of the funds now distributed as part of the state's utility tax formula — approximately 10 per cent — would be distributed as part of the state tax relief formula. Communities which have large utility company holdings would lose their "tax island" privileges under the revision. To be benefited most are the central cities with the highest property tax rates.

Other Diversions

In the distribution of the remaining utility tax fund, more weight would be given where the utility companies do their business rather than where their plant is located.

The size of the property tax relief pie would also be bolstered by a sharing with the state of an expected increase in revenue from the selective sales tax, plus a diversion of income taxes above the amount now shared with local governments on the present basis.

In both cases, municipalities with the highest property tax rates would benefit the most. While the changes will provide a measure of relief for the harder-pressed cities of the state, let's not kid ourselves. Our needs are such that there must be a drastic reorientation of state thinking about urban aid in Wisconsin. And we've reached a stage where our problems will not wait for a new study.

With all due respect to the governor, a new task force will not pay our mounting municipal bills, solve our social problems, eliminate blight, or clean up the slums. In his budget message last week the governor himself said that our present system of state aids and shared taxes "may well be outdated in terms of the best distribution of dollars to meet local government problems." Indeed, it is.

And with due respect to the state tax commissioner, I must agree with Fox Valley officials who drastically disagreed with his statement that local governments should be reorganized before state tax-sharing formulas are changed.

Mayors Going Ahead

You may have read the comments of Mayor Buckley in the Appleton Post-Crescent. He referred to the tax commissioner's statements as — and I quote — "The remarks of one man who doesn't appear to have too much knowledge of local government. . . the mayors are still going ahead with their plans to press the legislature for action."

Milwaukee, like Appleton, Sheboygan, Fond du Lac and other central cities, is in need of action now. Action now, because the most important problem in our state — indeed in our nation — is the problem of our cities.

If we are to build great cities — cities in which there is richness of opportunity, openness, freedom, beauty, health, safety, —functional cities — cities in which civilized man can live the good life — then additional funds must be forthcoming from our county, state and federal governments.

The need is great. The time is short.

This is the challenge to our cities. Do we build the great city or do we let the city wither away? Greatness or decline. There is no standing still.

And if we are to build the great city, then we need the financial resources to do the job.

This is important not only for our urban areas, but also for the state of Wisconsin, and for our nation as a whole.

We cannot be a great state without great cities. As the president has declared, "our nation cannot be great unless our cities are great."

Those for City Manager Are Called Socialists, Communists by Writer

(Editor's note: The Sunday Post-Crescent publishes this letter to give its readers in the Oshkosh area perspective in the thinking of some of those who oppose the manager form of city government.)

Editor, Post-Crescent.

On Friday, Jan. 27, the Oshkosh and Appleton newspapers printed a news story entitled "Women group supports city-manager form of government." The article then told of the League of Women Voters in Neenah-Menasha who, after one year of "study," came to the conclusion that a city-manager is needed in that area. This conclusion and "study" is another example of the support that is rendered to a small group of radicals which continues to propagandize for one-world government.

Not only are all of their so-called convictions false, but to suggest that all American cities join hands for a Socialist government is also false. This type of government assumes the responsibility for social hand-outs and the taking away of the citizen's participation in his own government. This thinking has constantly been the Communist-inspired position. Thought control is another Communist concept and one which the League of Women en Voters advocates. Mass propaganda from all the liberal, Socialist and Communist supporters has to a large degree manifested this thought control both in government and all levels of education. It is thus that the objectives of the conspirators are accepted without question. Patriotism, loyalty to America, and independent thinking cease to exist. It can't happen here? It is happening here!

The League of Women Voters was formed in 1920 by Mrs. Carrie Chapman She was a professional radical pacifist who, with a co-worker, Jane Adams, was active in establishing many subversive organizations. Among these Communist-front groups can be counted the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, a Communist pacifist, The American Civil Liberties Union (formed to give legal aid and comfort to Communists who become involved with the law). These two women operated Hull House which was a home and meeting place for the Reds and Radicals. William Z. Foster, Norman Thomas, Sidney Hillman, Eugene Debs frequented Hull House along with Robert Minor, Roger Baldwin, and Harry S. Ward.

You will recall it was the Ward Communist cell which penetrated the U. S. Agriculture Dept through Alger Hiss. Harry Dexter White, Nathan Witt, John Abt, Henry Collins and Lachlin Currie. From this beginning they penetrated into every U. S. agency. Their Communist policies are still in effect today.

Anna Lord Strauss, president of the League of Women Voters from 1944 to 1957 sponsored the Consumers National Federation which was cited by the House Un-American Activities Committee as "created by the Communist party and used for the purpose of spreading propaganda in schools and through women's clubs." Mrs. Strauss was named in 1951 to be an alternate delegate to the United Nations. She was not lonesome.

The League also advocates "Economic Planning" which as a planned economy is Socialism which in turn is Communism. . . . Communism is atheistic dictatorship! . . . Planned economy is the city manager form of government!

The leaders of the league have always advocated "make politics your business." As practiced by the league it is leftist. Their internationalism is, in short, selling America out. No doubt there are many loyal and good women belonging to the league. These women have no idea that they are being duped. They do not comprehend the radical background and the dangerous part this super-international group is playing in its efforts to betray the basic principles that have made America great. The League aims its propaganda at uninformed citizens and seeks to stampede public officials into accepting without question its well-planned, cleverly presented, and cunningly disguised programs.

All Statists Represent Rule by Brute Force

Editor, Post-Crescent.

A deadly kind of discrimination is rampant in this country but gets little attention. This blind ignorance is dramatically demonstrated right in our own backyard. The news media is well sprinkled with reports of Lincoln Rockwell's invitation to speak at Lawrence University in the near future. He of course represents the Nazi party which originated Germany Nazi is the abbreviation for National Socialist German Workers Party. This man represents the well publicized crimes against humanity during the period of Fascist tyranny in Hitler's Germany. The atrocities, the brutalities and the looting of private property is fresh in the minds of most Americans. The deep concern of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Jewish War Veterans, and Jewish leaders of the Fox River Valley is understandable and should be commended.

The appearance of this Fasbeing led by the city manager. Before you listen to the "intellectual" League of Women Voters who study from the Socialist viewpoint. I would suggest the citizens in Neenah and Menasha do a little homework before they put the noose around their necks.

cist-Socialist (one type of Statist or Leftist) is in itself a nauseating and horrifying incident, but the most frightening of all is that just a few weeks ago a man representing an equally amoral kind of Socialism (Communist Statism) appeared at the same University and I heard hardly a squeak of displeasure by the people that are now exhorting displeasure (and it is justified) at the appearance of Rockwell. When the Communist Herbert Aptheker spoke at Lawrence and espoused his filthy lies about the "popular communist movement" a predicting a communist police state in the U.S. within a generation. Some people in the audience actually applauded this despicable prediction.

Herb Aptheker, Gus Hall and Frank Wilkinson are welcomed on campuses all over the U.S. to poison the minds of our college students (with lies) under the guise of "Academic Freedom." And hardly a whimper of discontent by the news media and good citizens! These Communist Statist approve of the murders the concentration camps, and the terror of all the present and past communist that have looted the peoples property and taken their freedom by brute force. There is no such thing as a good Nazi or Communist. To Stain, Khrushchev, Ho Chi Minh, Brezhnev, Mao Tse-tung, Ben Bella, Castro, Konyatta, and all the rest of the butchers have in the past and are still killing, maiming, and suppressing their poverty stricken populations. Gus Hall "that nice communist" said, "I dream of the hour when the last congressman is strangled to death on the guts of the last preacher." Are the American people going to stand around and sound the alarm at only one kind of Socialist beast while we let the more "acceptable" beasts (the kind we build bridges to) circulate in our midst?

Statist (Communist, Fascist, Nazi, Autocrat, Collectivist, Welfare Statist) are all in the same totalitarian boat. They represent rule by force and looting of the peoples property which ends in terror and concentration camps. Fascists (Nazis) are not "Rightist". This is clever communist propaganda that has been espoused

ed by the liberal American press. They (Fascist) represent total government, by ownership or control of the means of production. In the political spectrum this is leftism clear and simple. The people of our country are being led by nose (conditioned) by the liberal establishment (Rockefeller - Ruether - Harriman and their Council on Foreign Relations) which tells us free people can live in peaceful co-existence with Godless, ruthless, deceitful communism. The kind of Statist brute is of little importance. Statism means enslavement by looting of the peoples property and dividing it among the politicians. Will Americans wake up in time? Who knows? Only time will answer this moot question.

Potomac Fever — by Jack Wilson

Representative Jerry Ford wants to make Washington a model city. The people who want home rule here say it already is—I model.

Statistics show the Pentagon has spent $340,000 for every Viet Cong killed in battle. At those prices the Mafia may bid for a piece of the action.

OSHKOSH—The women behind the needles-and-thread for Oshkosh Community Players' production, "Carnival," have the Herculean task of outfitting approximately 50 persons, some of whom require as many as four costume changes.

Everything has to be ready in time for dress rehearsals Feb. 13 and 14, but the majority of the costumes are ready now, according to Mrs. Richard Verhoeven, chairman of the costume committee.

"Much of the credit for the colorful costumes we have must go to the mothers and other women who have worked with me. It would have been an impossible job for just one or two women to handle," the chairman explained. Seamstresses lending a hand are Mrs. Larry Lewellyn, Mrs. Arthur Smith, Miss Dora Buege, Mrs. L. M. Bork, Mrs. Gilbert Gehring, Miss Judy Mallahn and Miss Rena Wilcox.

Final approval on the designs and materials used comes from Larry Klausch, director of the musical, which will run Feb. 16-19 at the Grand Theatre. The women have been sewing on this project for a little over a month.

There are a number of circus characters in the show: clowns, bearded ladies, stilts, gorillas, barkers, gypsies, show girls, midgits, snake charmers, cotton candy boys, strong men, fat ladies and Siamese twins. Costumes true to character have to be fashioned for each one.

White satin outfits, appliqued with sequined butterflies, had to be made for two of the leads. Mrs. Marjorie Moore Anania, who plays the part of Incomparable Rosalie, and Fred Steinbrecher, cast as Marco the Magnificent. "Fred needed a suit of tails with a cape, while Marge had to have a strapless white satin gown," Mrs. Verhoeven reported.

Double Take

To further test her talents, Mrs. Verhoeven was informed that a "duplicate" of Mrs. Anania, in white satin gown, had to be designed for use in one of the magic acts of the show. "This is a life-size replica, exact in every shape, manner and form," the costume chairman explained.

Four charming puppets — Renardo the Fox, Marguerite, Carrot Top and Horrible Henry, the Walrus — play an integral part in the show. They also were made by Mrs. Verhoeven, who reported that her rag bag has completely disappeared, primarily from "stuffing" the large puppets. Felt, yarn and various animal fur cloths were used in their design.

To further add to the "Carnival" atmosphere, Kewpie dolls were ordered from a supply house at Neenah and canes from New York. Mrs. Verhoeven constructed cotton candy using construction paper for fluff.

The production has actually become a family project, since Mr. Verhoeven is the choreographer for the show and the three children—Rick, Steve and Patti—have minor roles.

Costuming a Life-Size replica of Mrs. Marjorie Anania, who plays the incomparable Rosalie was one of the problems facing the seamstresses for the Oshkosh Community Players' "Carnival" production. Above, finished, the replica wears white satin with sequined butterflies.

Ricky Verhoeven will strut as a clown in the costume designed by his mother, Mrs. Richard Verhoeven, who is chairman of the costume committee. Balloons and cotton candy made of pink tissue fluff add to the carnival atmosphere. (Post-Crescent Photos)

Youth Groups Could Get Grant

OSHKOSH — This city meets here since the 1920's, with an criteria to benefit from a joint development grant to the Girl Scouts of the U.S.A. and Camp Fire Girls, Inc.

Miss Elsie M. Johnson, Executive Director of the Fox River Area Girl Scout Council, failed. However, after requests from individuals, an organizational meeting was held here last March. The Oshkosh Girl Scout program has continued to grow since then.

There are now 72 girls in the program, compared to 47 last summer. By February there will be two Junior troops, along with a Brownie and Cadette troop. Senior scouts participate in the Neenah association.

The local Camp Fire program has 2,326 persons, including adults and girls, participating. This includes 90 Blue Bird, 85 Camp Fire, 18 Junior Hi and eight Horizon Club groups.

Plans are being made on the national level for a minimum of six experimental projects to be held in various parts of the country during a two-year period. "Localities which will be selected for the projects, or those who can apply for it, are cities in which there are appropriate university facilities, and councils of both Camp Fire, Girls and Girl Scouts and potential recruitment resources," Miss Johnson explained.

Oshkosh is in the unique position of having both organizations, probably the only Wisconsin city outside of Madison that does. A Camp Fire Girls program has been in operation

Valley Cities Join 'Alliance' Support For Sharing Taxes

Municipal League Gets Some Criticism

BY DAVE GFFEY
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

Officials from Wisconsin's largest cities, including Appleton, Oshkosh and Fond du Lac, are rapidly solidifying their stand on state tax sharing and property tax relief although they repeatedly deny their informal "alliance" is a splinter from the Wisconsin League of Municipalities.

At the first meeting of the Alliance of Cities in Madison Jan. 4, the group chose Madison Mayor Otto Festge as chairman and City Manager Henry B. Buslee, Fond du Lac, was named secretary.

At that time they arranged for a two-day seminar to be held Feb. 15-16 in Oshkosh. Last Wednesday six cities of the "informal" group's members were invited to a discussion of revenue problems by Manitowoc Mayor Robert Rand.

While the interests of the League of Municipalities were mentioned constantly, it was obvious that the men at the meeting were representatives of large cities (the smallest represented was Wausau with a population of about 33,000).

Favor Annexation
They questioned their ability to act in formal parliamentary manner but unanimously voted to "go on record" in favor of unilateral annexation after a motion by Appleton Mayor George Buckley.

The League of Municipalities is a large group with many village members as well as large cities.

While members of the Alliance of Cities have vowed that they are not attempting to circumvent the league, some of them expressed rather pointed criticism of the league's methods.

Wausau Mayor John L. Kannenberg advocated an organization of the heads of large city governments.

Meet With Mayors
"If we want power, if we want to be able to support the league, we should meet with mayors of all communities," Kannenberg said.

"If we want to get any voice in the state government, we better enlarge on this (the alliance) and we better get organized," he said at the Manitowoc meeting.

"We would have more power, if you care to use that term."

Oshkosh Area Town Officials Deplore Talk

OSHKOSH — "The cities have gone into debt and now they want to come to the townships to help bail them out" Floyd Shurbert, Town of Oshkosh chairman said this week in relation to the recent talk about abolishing townships.

Oshkosh city manager, Angus Crawford, during a meeting of Fox River Valley cities in Manitowoc Thursday advocated the abolishing township government.

Shurbert said the townships must be doing something right, or so many people wouldn't be moving from cities to townships. He noted that the Town of Oshkosh has no town tax.

"All we have to pay is our share of county and state tax," he said.

Serve Definite Purpose
Lyle Raddatz, town of Nekimi chairman, maintained that townships were still serving a definite purpose, that of "dealing with the people."

"When people have something to complain about they know who to call. We are closer to them, they know us" he explained.

Raddatz foresaw higher taxes if townships are to be no more. "People will find themselves paying two or three times for

WSU-O Winter Carnival Queen Christine Borgwardt

Attractive Blonde WSU-O Queen

OSHKOSH — An attractive blonde sophomore from Wauwatosa, Miss Christine Lynn Borgwardt, who will also be a contestant in the Miss Oshkosh pageant Feb. 25, was sponsored by Chi Omega Sorority for the close of Winter Carnival activities Saturday Night at Wisconsin State University-Oshkosh.

The two were chosen by a student vote and were crowned Saturday afternoon at the conclusion of the winter games competition in the area behind Read Elementary School. Cheers, whistles and a mad rush of students onto the ice to congratulate the couple was visual testimony of the popularity of the couple.

Miss Borgwardt, who will also be a contestant in the Miss Oshkosh pageant Feb. 25, was sponsored by Chi Omega Sorority for the close of Winter Carnival activities Saturday Night at Wisconsin State University-Oshkosh.

The queen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Borgwardt, Wauwatosa, is a Donner Hall resident. She was one of the 10 best dressed coeds on campus for 1966 and was the 1966 state winner in the "make it yourself" contest. A singer and sports enthusiast, Christine was runnerup to the Wauwatosa girl who later became America's Junior Miss.

The royal couple and their court reigned over the Winter Carnival dance Saturday night, where the announcement of ice and snow contest winners and presentation of the President's Cup were made.

Annexation Not Feasible, Claims Town Chairman

Fond du Lac Town Calls State Unfair

BY DOUG KOPLIEN
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

FOND DU LAC — There has been much talk about annexation of the Town of Fond du Lac lately, but Town Chairman Chester Costello says the talk is economic nonsense.

All the city wants to do is get us in to raise its equalized valuation and extend its borrowing power," Costello said.

City Manager Henry Buslee wouldn't seriously disagree. Several times last week Buslee called the town a tax island, and talked of annexing it.

He told the Rotary Club that the town, which surrounds the city, is an urban area that lies in the path of the city's further growth.

In recent weeks the state has also suggested annexation as a solution to the pollution problem caused by the town's lack of suitable sewerage facilities.

At present town property owners are paying $38.60 per $1,000 assessed valuation, compared to the city's rate of $32.47 per $1,000 equalized valuation. But town property is assessed at only 32.79 per cent of full value while the city's property is assessed at 96.41 per cent.

The town, this year, with a state tax return of about $300,000 was able to pay its share of state, county, and local taxes, and special charges, for vocational school and handicapped, state trust fund loans. The return also paid for $90,000 on the school tax.

So all that was left for property owners to pay was the remainder of the cost of school operation in Fond du Lac, North Fond du Lac and Oakfield district.

State Department of Resource Development Director Freeman Holmer has suggested that the town may be denied state aid in constructing a sewage collection system.

Costello said, "We are exploring whether the state can deny us the state aid and force us to annex."

"In denying us state aid they are saying in effect that unless we behave ourselves and be good boys we won't get any cake," Costello quipped.

"It is the most unfair thing that I have ever heard of," Costello continued.

He explained that the township might build their own system without state aid and then hook onto the city lines and pay a sewer tax.

The city has opposed this. Henry Buslee, city manager, said recently, "The city feels that sewage is one of our banding the proceedings."

Council-Manager Recall Question To be on Ballot

OSHKOSH — A recall referendum on council — manager government definitely will be on the ballot in the April election, Dr. Paul C. Whyte, petition committee chairman, said today.

Dr. Whyte said Saturday afternoon, "We're on our last 20 petitions." Deadline for filing petitions for the referendum is Tuesday. About 2,228 signatures on the petitions are necessary. "It's going to be done," Dr. Whyte said.

The drive for signatures has been "picking up" in the last week, Dr. Whyte said. "I gather that there is a certain reservoir of discontent over council — manager government," he said.

The referendum will be the third since 1958. The previous two were unsuccessful. Dr. Whyte said the petition committee of about 40 people will form the nucleus of the organization that will mount a campaign on a referendum vote. He said campaign plans will be made shortly after the signatures are filed.

He said the anti-council-manager forces will not be able to match the financial resources of pro-council-manager interests. "We'll have to be David and let them be Goliath," he said their fight might be decided.

Reuss Offers Bill to Broadcast Hearings

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bill to authorize televising and broadcasting of House committee hearings was introduced Thursday by Rep. Henry S. Reuss, D-Wis.

"I intend to shop around a bit for a job, and I also intend to continue to travel around in the district to keep in front of the public and in contact with the public," he added.

Early in January, Race had announced he had applied for the Economic Development Administration job, but stated he was undecided whether he would move to Superior or commute from Fond du Lac if he was hired.

Race held the Sixth District Congressional seat for a two-year term, elected in the Johnson landslide year of 1964. Last November, the district's first Democratic congressman since 1939 was defeated by William A. Steiger, Oshkosh Republican.

Neenah Driver Hurt After Losing Control Of Car on U. S. 41

OSHKOSH — Raymond A. Hoppe, 1059 Gillingham Road, Neenah, was seriously injured when his car hit a bridge on U.S. 41 in the Town of Neenah Saturday morning.

Hoppe was taken to Theda Clark Memorial Hospital by ambulance.

State police said Hoppe was driving south on U.S. 41 when his car went onto the right shoulder and hit a guard rail. The car then veered across the road, crossing the median strip, and struck a bridge abutment on the east side of the road over County Trunk S, where it came to rest, police said.

Oshkosh Study May Cause Dilemma

Play Checkers With Fire Stations?

OSHKOSH — Construction of a fifth fire station on a site east of the Chicago & North Western railroad tracks here may set the city "playing checkers" with four other stations, according to Fire Chief Otto Stoegbauer.

However, he is concerned, as are councilmen, with fire protection to the area east of the tracks where a train might bar passage of fire equipment for precious minutes.

The mile-long strip along Lake Winnebago is about three-tenths of a mile wide. It contains five schools: Mercy Hospital, soon to be 400 beds and the city's only general hospital; several small, private nursing homes, and a growing population.

Census tracing recently completed estimated the population there are some 11,000 by 1970.

Station Debated
Councilmen have asked for a study of the city's fire protection service from the existing four stations with specific attention to the area east of the railroad tracks and west of State 41.

Fairly well accepted is a proposal to re-locate the main station on a city parking lot at Otter Avenue and Court Street. Plans to replace and augment parking areas closer to the central business district will open the way for the main station project.

The East Side station, however, is conjectural. Its need has been debated upon a number of occasions.

Avoid Congestion
Harland Bartholomew & Associates, the city's consultant planners, determine location barrier that the railroad tracks might create. The East Side area appears to be adequately served. Service is from the main station in downtown Oshkosh which covers a quarter-mile radius and from the Number Eight station at New York Avenue and Central Street, servicing a three-quarter mile area. Planners saw no reason for additional service in 1963.

They recommended relocation of the main station and of a South Side station and future construction of an additional station at the north end of the city.

Density Increases
Chief Stoegbauer said, however, that in at least part of the district apartment houses and new single family homes have added to the housing unit occupancy.

Moving the main fire station east from its present site can be expected to improve service to the south end of the East Side strip, although the chosen site remains west of the tracks. Planners are unlikely to change that plan, since the station serves the high value, heavy-use downtown section to the west.

The fire chief said discussion of an East Side station has generally indicated interest in its location at the north end of the strip, probably in the vicinity of Murdock Avenue and Bowen Street. This would overlap its reasonable service area with that of Number Eight and start the "checkers game."

Checkers Game Starts
Number Eight could move to Vinland and Murdock. At that location, however, its service area would conflict with that of Number Two.

Number Two is presently located on Congress St., next to the Oshkosh Avenue bridge on a site City Mgr. Angus Crawford maintains is too small for good operation. Joining the "checkers game," Number Two could push across the bridge and south to the Witzel Avenue-S. Sawyer Street area, impinging on the Number Six service area from its location at Ohio and W. 10th Avenue.

Number Six, already too close to Number Four at W. 11th Avenue and Nebraska, might move to the airport-industrial park area. A location at about W. 20th Avenue and Knapp Street would put it in position to serve the newly annexed development west of State 41.

of fire stations on the basis of area and land occupancy. Large commercial and industrial sites should be within three-quarters of a mile of a fire station. Residential areas need service within a quarter mile. Narrow streets and traffic congestion should be avoided in planning such facilities.

Mid-1969 New Date

Postpone Opening Of Park Plaza

OSHKOSH — The first stores in Park Plaza will not open in 1968 as originally expected, but in mid-1969, Ted Leyhe, vice president of Miles Kimball Co., said Friday.

Razing for the $9 million downtown redevelopment project will begin next week, Leyhe said. He said there is no definite date for start of construction.

The huge, new downtown project will extend west from the present downtown area along the north bank of the Fox River. Miles Kimball Co. is the developer.

Leyhe said the rest of the original plans for Park Plaza have not changed significantly. He said Miles Kimball is still negotiating with two major department stores to occupy large store buildings in Park Plaza. Cost of the development still is estimated at about $9 million, including cost of a parking ramp, Leyhe said.

Original plans called for ten separate building complexes separated by malls, promenades, arcades and squares. The development would cover a 16-acre site bounded by Jackson and Commerce streets, Pearl Avenue and the river.

Two major department stores are planned. Also to be included are a large supermarket, a variety store, a motel, a restaurant, a movie theater and office building, parking ramps, shops and service stores. The main mall will be covered.

OTI Will Serve as 'Feeder' for Area-Wide Vocational School

OSHKOSH — The 55-year-old Oshkosh School of Vocational, Technical and Adult Education is looking to its future as part of an area system.

Since Jan., 1965, the school has been devoted to post-high school education. From its classes come a steady stream of technicians.

"In the area concept," William Sirek, the director said, "we will continue to offer locally-oriented programs. Evening school and day school vocational and extension classes and apprentice programs will continue."

He said the new area technical school is expected to offer post-high school courses largely at the associate degree level. It will serve as a "feeder" institution, where a first year of the two-year associate degree courses will be offered. The second year will be offered at the new area school.

Now Offers Two Years
Oshkosh Technical Institute conducts now post-high school vocational and technical courses leading to an Associate Degree after completion of a two-year approved technical course of collegiate work. Its courses are offered in the three divisions of business, marketing, and trades and industry.

Sirek said the new arrangement will make it possible for the "feeder" schools to meet the needs of the ever-growing student load.

In addition, he said, the area technical institute will allow for a tremendous expansion in technical offerings to meet the more divergent needs of the area employers. By the same token, he said, the broader tax base of the area school will make them financially possible.

Directors of the proposed four-county area's five local vocational schools are meeting monthly to discuss possible curriculum. The local schools are at Oshkosh, Appleton, Neenah, Menasha and Kaukauna.

Training for people needed to do the work in the area's business and industry is the basic criterion. So far, Sirek reported, the directors have considered the need for training of technicians in printing, chemistry technology, fluiditics (industrial applications of hydraulics and pneumatics), physical metallurgy, and cooking at chefs' level.

Consider Health Studies
They have outlined an approach to evaluation of the need for technicians in the health occupations such as dentists' technicians, practical nursing and the like. They are considering needed courses in agri-related occupations.

Whatever curriculum offerings are implemented, Sirek predicted, "every curriculum must be capable of change at least every five years to meet the rapid advancement of knowledge and technology."

The Oshkosh Technical Institute, for instance, is considering a course for the training of truck drivers and seeking the cooperation of the Teamsters' Union and major employers.

Oshkosh offers the only conservation technician's program in the Midwest. The technical institute now is proposing a program in agri-business as a somewhat related course to train salesmen and users in chemicals and fertilizers, feeds, seeds, and farm supplies.

Celebrate Birthday
Sirek said the school has some 400 students in associate degree programs and that students are increasing at the rate of about 33 per cent annually. Last year, graduates filled about one in 10 of the jobs listed with the placement office.

Night school classes for upgrading skills of the currently employed, training for advancement or for a change in jobs attract about 1,000 students with annual increases of about 35 per cent.

The Oshkosh school is the result of a federal act that will be 50 years old during education week Feb. 19 to 25. The Smith-Hughes Act, passed in 1917 as the first National Vocational Education Act, gave impetus to the 5-year-old school in Oshkosh.

Oshkosh was the second city in Wisconsin to organize a local vocational board of education in 1912. First classes were continuation work for "out-of-school" juveniles 14 to 16 who were employed and required to have five hours of schooling a week.

First service to continuation students was to 82 boys and 109 girls.

The school trained classes in defense work during World War II and continued with a program for returning servicemen.

Oshkosh—Man With a Bow Tie?

New Symbol for City

OSHKOSH — The city of Oshkosh has a new symbol.

The symbol is used on new stationery being printed for the city. It is to be the new municipal insignia.

Future uses include the marking of city vehicles and other municipal equipment.

The symbol replaces a stylized letterhead in the same turquoise, gray and black coloring which sought to publicize everything from cows to swimming and transportation. The new one appears to leave more space for communication with its neat and colorful logotype.

Designed by Shilobrit Advertising Studio, the letterhead has a smart, modern appearance, a departure from both the black and white Chief Oshkosh profile and the sprawling multi-figure designs used earlier.

It combines a turquoise "C" joined with a gray arc to represent City of Oshkosh. A black circle forms the center. Underlining the central design is a double quadrilateral connoting the "W" for Wisconsin and intended, according to report, to suggest the rippling waters of Lake Winnebago and boating.

New letterheads carry a City of Oshkosh watermark. City purchasers said there is no central inventory of the old stationery remaining, indicating that offices will soon be using the new letterhead as the old supplies are exhausted. Still to be delivered, however, are new envelopes.

The design is not without its irreverent critics, however. It may suggest a target to some, a not indifferent idea for a "target Oshkosh" slogan with an appeal to people seeking location of a home, plant, or vacation. To some, it suggests a round-headed man with a bow tie, a less useful image. The quadrilaterals resemble lightning to others, a possible representation of the city's growth or the speed with which problems are solved.

Printing on the new letterheads notes that Oshkosh has a council-manager administration.

Outagamie Ties With Winnebago in Number of Lawyers

Outagamie and Winnebago counties lead the Fox Valley area counties in the number of active members of the State Bar of Wisconsin with 102 each.

Four active judges are in Winnebago, Outagamie and a county in the number of Fond du Lac counties while Shawano has two and Calumet, Green Lake and Waupaca each have one.

Three inactive bar members reside in Fond du Lac County, two each in Green Lake, Outagamie and Waupaca counties, one in Shawano. Nine live in Winnebago County.

Fond du Lac County follows with 52; Waupaca, 23; Shawano, 16; Green Lake, 15, and Calumet, 12.

Ratio of Drinking to Crashes Is High

BY PETER GENIESSE
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

In the wee hours of the morning, a late model sedan hurdled over the icy patches on a county road, then spun out of control for 500 feet, flipped and flew through the air for another 170 feet, ricocheted off two culverts, snapped off a power pole and plowed into a wooden fence.

The 48-year-old driver became a traffic statistic, one of more than a thousand who were headlined in the state's press last year.

What the public wasn't told was that this motorist was dead drunk. The coroner suspected the man had been drinking when he arrived on the scene. After all, he had become used to the smell of alcohol at fatal accident scenes. He could predict that every other fatality would be caused, at least in part, by booze.

The blood tests showed the dead motorist wasn't in control of his faculties. The alcohol in his blood registered .33, more than twice the amount needed to be declared legally drunk.

More Than Half

More than 100 drunken drivers died on the state highways in 1966. Tests showed the victims' blood contained at least .15 per cent alcohol.

Another 25 or so had readings between .10 and .14. There has been an effort to have the state law mended so that a reading of .10 would be a legal definition of "under the influence."

Of the 31 traffic fatalities in Winnebago County in 1966, alcohol was a definite factor in at least 11. Coroner Art C. Miller said nine of the 11 drivers had more than .10 per cent alcohol in their systems. Two were above the .30 mark.

The same percentage held true in Outagamie County, according to Coroner Bernard Kemps. Twenty-three persons died in traffic accidents last year. Thirteen were drivers and four of those motorists had blood-alcohol readings above .15.

Really Much Higher

Although these figures already are astounding, county coroners point out the number of dead, drunken drivers is actually much higher. Blood tests are conducted on all traffic victims soon after their deaths. However, if a motorist survives a day or so, no testing is conducted since transfusions and medication would alter the results.

The state recorded the worst year on record for traffic fatalities in 1966 when 1,119 persons lost their lives.

The county coroners are helping pinpoint the causes of traffic mishaps and after two years of blood alcohol tests on victims, all would agree with Outagamie's Kemps that "drinking is a very, very heavy factor in traffic accidents."

The drunk drivers who don't become grim statistics are numerous. Slightly more than 200 motorists were convicted of driving while under the influence of intoxicants in Winnebago and Outagamie county courts in 1966. At least that number never got to court.

Thousands Get Away

And countless thousands of drivers got away with weaving through traffic in a drunken stupor.

The conclusion reached by traffic safety officials is that drivers who drink are exceptionally accident-prone. Figures from a large insurance company indicate that a motorist with a .15 reading is 10 times as likely to have an accident as a sober driver. Even with a .05 reading, a driver's chances of getting

As the traffic toll mounted toward record heights last year, an aroused public demanded with renewed vigor that something be done to stop the blood — and booze — from flowing on the state's highways.

Some felt more law enforcement was needed; others asked for heavier penalties for offenders.

Policemen are faced with a dilemma. They can't stop a motorist just because they see him leaving a tavern.

Many Refuse Test

"After midnight Saturday, I'd guess eight out of every 10 drivers on our city streets would register at least .10," one policeman said.

The officer must have evidence the motorist doesn't have the car under control. Then he is taken to the station where physical coordination tests are conducted. Then comes the breathalyzer test, which many drivers refuse.

Almost all charges are brought into court under city or county ordinances, which call for a maximum fine of $200. The state statute provides for a jail sentence but local officials prefer to keep the revenue at home.

Governor Warren P. Knowles feels that a uniform 21-year-old drinking law would help. He also supports an implied consent clause which would force suspected drunken drivers to submit to alcohol testing or face an automatic three-month jail sentence. A third point, which would go far toward curbing the drinking driver, the governor feels, is reducing the legal intoxication level from .15 to .10.

Are You Drunk?

Some police officers believe if the level was dropped to .10, convictions would increase by at least 50 per cent. They say that many motorists fail the physical coordination test, but they register less than .15 on the breathalyzer and thus aren't brought into court.

Are you drunk when your blood alcohol stands at .10? Dr. Herman Heise, a pioneer in blood testing from Milwaukee, says yes. Most physicians agree the turning point toward intoxication is around .10.

The only trouble is: few people know when they've reached the .10 mark.

Fond du Lac Air Commuter Service 'Starts to Catch On,' Official Says

FOND DU LAC — Mid-State Air Commuter service to Fond du Lac is "starting to catch on now," a company official said last week.

Despite weather complications, that caused a four-day shutdown, 42 more passengers used the commuter service at Fond du Lac in December than in the previous month.

Station manager Frank Eibl said, "if we could have flown during the time that O'Hare Airport (Chicago) was shut down because of the snow, we could have transported another 100 passengers."

A total of 407 persons used the commuter service in January, compared to 365 in December. Air Freight, however, dropped from 1,238 pounds in December to 570 in January, Eibl reported. Mrs. Roy Shwery, Marshfield, Mid-State secretary - treasurer, explained that although the first couple of months were not up to the original expectations with 325 passengers traveling in October, the first month of operation, and 352 in November.

"We definitely plan to continue our Fond du Lac operation," she said.

Three Flights

The commuter service also operates out of Marshfield, Ashland, Clintonville, Wisconsin Rapids and Chicago. Basically the airline serves persons wanting fast transportation to the Chicago airport for flights elsewhere.

There are now three flights out of Fond du Lac at 7 and 11:25 a.m. and 4 p.m. to Chicago with four northbound planes—three going to Wisconsin Rapids and one to Clintonville. Mrs. Shwery said that Fond du Lac would be in line for service by two 15 passenger propeller jets that the airline had ordered and would be in use by late 1967.

She indicated that many of the city's industries have been using the service and "many industrial salesmen have standing reservations for Monday morning," she said.

"We also have many passengers coming to Fond du Lac to contact the industries," Mrs. Shwery noted.

Cities Alliance Backs Tax Sharing Proposal

with our congressmen and U.S. senators if we were united," the Wausau mayor said.

Some of the officials at the Manitowoc meeting expressed discontent with league conferences saying they were not informed beforehand of the issues to be discussed. The league sponsors a spokesman in both the state and federal lawmaking bodies. At the Manitowoc meeting, none of the persons attending knew the name of their lobbyist in Washington.

Buslee, however, was careful to avoid casting any shadows on the league. "We should be concerned with our relationship with the league," he said, "because they do a tremendous job."

"This group," Buslee stated, "should just help the League to give impetus to legislation."

Indication to Madison
"The alliance is just an indication to Madison that the cities have about had it," Buslee said.

Kannenberg answered, "We could do the League a lot more good if we were prepared on an issue."

One of the purposes of the Manitowoc meeting was to discuss a proposal to revise the state's revenue-sharing formula for sales, income and utility taxes with emphasis on greater relief on "high - tax areas," namely large cities.

The plan is being finalized by the City of Milwaukee and was outlined by fiscal controller Shepard Magidson. Other matters discussed included "piggy-back" sales tax, in-lieu-of-tax payments to cities by state institutions presently tax exempt and increased state aids for education.

All the issues were suggested as providing immediate tax relief to large cities.

Milwaukee Plan
The Milwaukee plan which will be offered in bill form to the legislature, admittedly would cut the tax share of some smaller communities but increase the state revenues of large cities, including those in the Fox River Valley.

Wauwatosa Mayor Ervin Meier openly opposed the proposed formula.

Meier also said, "I'm worried that we're going to get so many groups up there in Madison that the legislature won't listen to any of us."

"Last year both parties in the legislature said that in no case should the cities come to the state for more money," Meier added. "I think that our best bet is to encourage a study and offer a report in January of 1968 when the legislature reconvenes."

Task Force
A state task force presently is studying the critical revenue-sharing issue and supposedly will make known its findings next year.

Buslee said, however, "One of the reasons we're here is to change the mood of the legislature. We can't wait until January of 1968."

"We are concerned from the standpoint of cities alone as opposed to cities and villages," Buslee said. "If the legislature doesn't revise the formula then they should give us the annexation prerogative."

Some Students Favor Longer Day

FOND DU LAC — Ask a group of high school students how they feel about a longer school day and, strangely enough, you find some who are in favor of it.

A committee of teachers at Goodrich High School recently recommended to the school board that the idea of an 8-period school day be dropped. The committee said the pressure and tension on the students would be too great.

But there are some students who like the idea, because it would give them an opportunity to take an extra course. Of course there are also some students who don't like the idea.

'Too Much Pressure'

Mike Julka, a senior, doesn't think the eight-hour day would be beneficial to average students. "Another course added to their schedule without more study halls would just place more pressure on them," he said.

David Kuter, also a senior, who is presently taking five courses thought that "an opportunity to take another course would tend to broaden all students' background, whether they planned to go on to college or not."

Larry Bornemann disagreed with Kuter. He said, "It would be good for the above average student who could carry an additional course, but the average and below average student couldn't handle the extra load."

Mike Reichling thought that if students were given an opportunity to carry an extra subject, they would choose the ones that did not require any more homework.

Mary Jensen pointed out that, if students were required to carry another course, they would be better prepared for college. "Instead of easing off in the senior year, a student who planned to go to college would be more or less forced to study harder and thereby develop better study habits," she said.

Rhea Lowe dissented. "It would place too much of a strain on those students who can't handle the load now," he said.

Classes now start at 8 a.m. and run to 3:40 p.m. The first period is an activity period. Under the eight-period day classes would end either at 4:05 p.m. or 4:20 p.m., depending on the length of the lunch hour.

Five Courses

If the school day were extended students would be required to carry five courses compared to four under the present seven-period system.

"If a student has a B average he has the alternative of taking another course and, under an eight period system, the alternative of a sixth subject would be offered on the same criteria," Kurt Thiel, assistant principal, said.

But he also pointed out that fact that we would have to carry another subject."

Another Poor Grade

Kuter explained that he would like the opportunity to carry another class and he thought many students thought the same way he does. "It wouldn't have to be a hard class, but it could be one that would broaden the student's horizons like art or music."

Julka summed up his thinking with "if you pile another course on the lower students it will be sner, but I don't think that it would be enough to offset the poor grade in."

May Shun Invitation

Oppose Regional Plan Membership

FOND DU LAC — The of just an affiliation with a "far chairman of the Wolf River flung commission."

If the county would vote in a full-time planner, he would be able to do much more detailed work than a regional commission," he said.

Gordon Bubolz, chairman, brought up the matter of new members at the quarterly meeting of the commission Wednesday. Fond du Lac County was mentioned along with four other counties.

Bubolz said the commission might have to change its name to "Northeastern Wisconsin Regional Planning Commission" to encourage all of the potential members.

David Carpenter, the county's resident planner, said Friday he opposed affiliation with the commission. He says the commission still does not have the necessary staff to duplicate the detailed planning that he is furnishing the county.

He also pointed out that the new housing urban development (HUD) requirements are going to make it imperative that the county have a planner instead of the same as theirs."

Bar May Poll in County Judicial Race

OSHKOSH — The Winnebago candidates were qualified for contest which pitted the present Circuit Judge Arnold J. Cane against the late David Allen for the circuit judgeship which was being vacated by the retiring Helmut Arps.

In the only other judicial position up for election this spring, County Court Branch 1 Judge Herbert J. Mueller is unopposed for reelection.

Incumbent Judge James V. Sitter is being opposed in his bid for reelection by Oshkosh attorney Thomas Williams.

Members of the bar association's judicial committee indicated that if it were decided to conduct a preferential poll, it probably would be in the form of a "qualifications" poll rather than an endorsement.

A qualification poll would indicate only if bar association members felt if either, or both, association in the last judicial

Media Outgrow Chambers

OSHKOSH — Mass media here, static in numbers if not in activity for a number of years, appears now to be outgrowing City Hall facilities.

Council chambers there, designed in 1964, last week ran out of room for news reporters at the table planned to accommodate six, including two newsmen.

To reporters from the two newspapers were added reporters from two local radio stations. One brought a tape recorder to add to the crowded situation. The press area is at a table which accommodates the city manager, attorney, clerk and director of public works.

A seat at the end before a microphone of the room's public address system is commonly referred to as the "hot seat." It is used by people addressing the council.

WSU-O Faculty Involved in Life of Oshkosh

BY EDITH BOCK

Post-Crescent Staff Writer

OSHKOSH — They receive neither the "egghead" nickname nor the "egghead" treatment here, the Wisconsin State University-Oshkosh faculty members whose participation in community life is wide, deep and well established.

"From the college" is the way they are identified generally. True, it is sometimes said with a sniff, but more frequently with a tinge of respect for status and in recognition of genuine contributions made in time, effort, interest and expertise to the clubs, projects and welfare of the city.

Caught in a controversy, they get as good as they give. No man's opinion or occupation is much protected by rank in an argument. WSU-O faculty members take such situations in stride.

A Larger Segment

"From the college" participation in community affairs is a long-standing custom here. University status for the former Normal School probably has changed only the number of faculty participants, except for the addition of certain area services. With more than 500 faculty members, many with families, they represent a larger segment of the community.

There are faculty and their families in church congregations, service clubs, social organizations, educators' associations, business and industrial groups, sports teams and cultural activities.

Dr. Roger E. Guiles, WSU-O president, is a hard working member of the city planning commission among his many community commitments. Dr. Robert Polk, Dr. James Duncan and Warner Geiger are frequently involved with city plans as they affect and are affected by university growth. All three are familiar Oshkosh neighbors.

Dr. M. I. Vuchich headed the Winnebago County census tracing committee in its work toward gaining metropolitan statistical area declaration, working with representatives of city and county governments, police, business, industry, public utilities, welfare agencies. When the city needed professional opinion on equitable pay for an employee group, it went to the university's economics department and Dr. Vuchich provided an analysis and evaluation.

An "Oshkosh boy," Robert Brismaster, member of the WSU-O extended services department, serves on the Oshkosh Public Museum board and is closely involved with Town and Gown, the university - city annual concert series. Miss Marie Hirsch, retired WSU-O faculty member has been on the museum board since long before her retirement. Richard Osborn, another WSU-O faculty member, is curator of prints at the museum.

The history, politics and natural resource studies of the Wolf River Regional Planning Commission have been furthered by contributions from WSU-O faculty members including Dr. Charles Goff, Dr. Jacob Shapiro and Dr. George Seiber.

Red Cross, Messiah

Dr. Martin Gruberg is president of the Oshkosh Human Rights Council, following Dr. Roy Robinson in that post.

Mrs. Ruth P. Nelson, associate dean of students, is a long-time, participating member of Oshkosh Community Council. Oshkosh knows Dr. Everett G. Pyrie as adviser to Alpha Phi Omega whose members are active in Red Cross blood collections and other community-oriented projects on campus. Donald Zahalka, WSU-O director of student publications, is a member of the Red Cross board of directors.

Dr. Harold Porter from the WSU-O music department directs the recreation department's annual "Messiah" concert which involves faculty among its massed church choirs and Civic Symphony participants.

Flood of Art

From the university comes a veritable flood of art, music and drama, complete with trained people willing and able to share their talents with the community. Miss Gloria Link, Dr. John Burr, Miss Suzanne Roy, and Karl Brock among others are welcome additions to the community's music and drama organizations.

Oshkosh people join university audiences for recitals, plays, concerts, movies, art exhibits and a continuous round of symposiums, lectures, workshops and discussions.

An informal group of civic leaders and university faculty and administrators meet more than occasionally to keep in touch with latest plans and developments.

There are faculty members involved with the American Association of University Women, Twentieth Century Club, Rotary, Kiwanis, Candlelight Club, Chamber of Commerce, Associated Industries, League of Women Voters, Winnebago Historical Society, Fox Valley Archeological Society, Civic Symphony, Red Cross, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, YMCA, bridge clubs, dancing societies, bowling leagues, city league basketball and softball, Camp Fire Girls, and both Republican and Democratic Party organizations.

Active at Museums

Faculty services are enlisted by the museums, hospitals, schools and business groups.

WSU - O people help with United Fund and with fund drives of a variety of organizations. They worked on the city's Wonderful Wisconsin Week observance last year.

At the Oshkosh Public Museum, Mrs. Marilyn Berens teaches an art class. Paine Art Center finds a volunteer in Dr. Watson Parker, WSU-O history department member, who will prepare the special captions for an unusual exhibition of Frederic Remington paintings which will highlight the year.

Center officials call three or four times each year for lectures and art demonstrations by WSU - O faculty members. About a third of the annual attendance at the art center is provided by faculty and students.

WSU - O faculty contributions to area education reach far outside the campus classroom.

From Art to Zoology

Through the campus base of the Cooperative Education Service Area (CESA), in-service training for public school teachers has included new mathematics and reading. From its resources come specialists needed in area public school systems.

Fox River Valley Career Resource & Development Center is campus based, working with job opportunities, requirements, training programs, guidance, educational programs and assistance to business, professional, and vocational organizations.

Faculty members worked on a special study of area vocational districts. They staff the Fox Valley Curriculum Study Council of 20 high schools.

There is no official record of the involvement of the faculty in community activities.

Any list is a partial one at best.

Oshkosh, too, finds it difficult to evaluate the treasure trove of a resident speakers' bureau on subjects from art to zoology, the expertise of dance decorations devised by art professors, the assistance of professional knowledge and helpful enthusiasm in a hundred and more areas of community living.

Mental Health Group Maps Study Areas

Newly Created County Organization Charts First Steps

OSHKOSH — Procedures involving referrals and follow-ups for persons seeking and obtaining treatment for mental illness will be the first area of study of the newly created County Mental Health and Mental Retardation Planning Committee.

The committee, which was created by the county board in November and appointed by Board Chairman Joseph Drexler in January, held its organizational meeting Thursday. Supv. Ray Toner, Oshkosh, is temporary chairman.

Study of follow-up procedures was recommended to the committee by Dr. Charles Cahill, medical director of the Winnebago County Guidance Clinic, and Dr. Darold Treffert, superintendent of Winnebago State Hospital.

The two, along with County Welfare Director Norman Whitford, will be asked to outline the problem to the committee at a meeting tentatively scheduled for 7:30 p.m. March 14.

The committee was set up to study and coordinate efforts of both public and private agencies in the fields of mental health and mental retardation.

Three members of the committee are from the county board and six are lay representatives. One member, a physician, must still be appointed.

'Silence Is Betrayal'

Campus Clergyman Leads Drive to Arouse Protest on War in Vietnam

OSHKOSH — A campus clergyman has revealed plans to form a committee to educate the public on the "facts" of the Vietnam war, counsel conscientious objectors and lead a "fast for rebirth of compassion."

The time has come in the war in Vietnam when "silence is betrayal," the Rev. Paul Treat II, read to newsmen Friday during a press conference at First Congregational Church.

The Rev. Mr. Treat, pastor of the United Campus Christian Fellowship, and five other Oshkosh area delegates returned Friday from a "mobilization" in Washington, D.C., of a national committee of clergy and laymen concerned about Vietnam.

A position paper from the "mobilization" said the group, reported as 2,500 strong from 45 states, joins the major Christian and Jewish organizations "in urging a reappraisal of our policy in Vietnam."

To Begin Recruiting

Treat said he will head a local committee and begin recruiting immediately. He said the churches aren't trying to dictate, but to influence the nation's foreign policy.

Goals of the local committee, like those of the parent body, will be to educate the public to the "facts" about U.S. participation in the war in Vietnam, provide a counseling center for conscientious objectors and selective objectors ("Helping to clarify, not to convert," the UCCF pastor said), and publicize a "fast for the rebirth of compassion" Wednesday through Friday, coinciding with the beginning of Lent.

He indicated local committee leadership could be expected to come from the academic community, the clergy and concerned laymen.

With him on the five-day trip of Washington were the Rev. Homer Retzlaff, pastor, First Evangelical United Brethren Church, representing the Oshkosh Council of Churches; the Rev. David Collins, Methodist campus minister; and the Rev. Benedict Kleiber, chaplain, University Newman Center. Completing the delegation were David Feirer, high school student, and Tom Fuhrmann, Wisconsin State University - Oshkosh student, who was absent from the press conference.

'Flow Economy'

Feirer said the delegates "paid our own way except for lodging." They flew economy class, he said, and slept in accommodations provided by Washington churches. He had ner services and to extend it to the township would be eliminating any cause for them to ever join the city."

Costello has indicated that the town residents are willing to pay their fair share of the sewage costs to the city but, "We can't see any reason for annexing for all purposes," he said.

"The city has got itself into trouble and now they are looking to us for help," Costello stated. He indicated that the town is not interested in helping bail the city out of its financial straits.

"Town government is the only economical honest government left and now they are trying to eliminate it," he said.

What puts the town in such good financial shape is three large industries plus the fact that many corporation executives live in the township along Lake Winnebago.

Since the state income tax is returned to the municipality in which a person resides, rather than where he works, the town is getting a big state tax return. There are 3,851 residents in the township, but many of these live on the lakeshore in an exclusive residential area where personal incomes and income taxes are high.

The city is "boxed" in by the horseshoe-shaped township on three sides. Lake Winnebago forms the other side. City growth, therefore, is severely restricted.

There have been spot annexations by the city in the southwest area, but they have involved mainly industrial park land which does not bring in tax revenue at the present time.

Annexation of the entire township would add greatly to the equalized valuation of the city, plus provide extra income from the state tax return and open the way for expansion.

The town's favorable tax climate may change somewhat if the town takes it upon itself to construct its own sewage collection system.

NASA Studying Steps To Avoid Another Fire

per square inch. It was the first time that Apollo 1 had been pressurized on the launch pad. NASA had no comment on why the system had not first been checked while the vehicle was not manned.

Seamans reported this sequence of events:

6:31:03 p.m.—Chaffee reports a fire in the spacecraft.

6:31:04—The craft's inertial platform indicates a small amount of motion which may have been caused by movement of the crew.

6:31:05—Cabin temperature starts to rise.

6:31:09—White repeats report of fire in the cockpit. Cabin pressure starts to rise.

6:31:12—Cabin temperature increases rapidly. Chaffee reports bad fire in the cabin. He increases illumination of cabin lights and turns on the craft's internal batteries.

6:31:17—Cabin pressure reaches 29 pounds per square inch and cabin ruptures.

After the third report of fire, the report said "no other intelligent communications were received although some listeners believe there was one sharp cry of pain."

Had No Time

Grissom and White, acting calmly, had begun emergency exit procedures, working to move the hatch. But they had no time during the 15-second holocaust. At least a minute is required to remove the hatch from either inside or outside.

Because of heat and fire, emergency crews took five minutes to remove the hatch. There reportedly was some confusion by some members on how to operate gas masks.

Seamans said that four seconds before the fire, there was a sudden rise in the oxygen flow into the suits. He said investigators have not been able to relate this to the blaze.

There also were reports of irregular data from one of the spacecraft systems and a drop in a C-band communications beacon.

Even if the cause of the fire never is found, NASA is studying means of preventing a repeat of the tragedy without jeopardizing the moon schedule too much.

Explosive Hatch

One proposal is to equip Apollo spacecraft with an explosive hatch that could fly off quickly. The Mercury and Gemini capsules had quick escape systems. But designers said such a hatch might weaken the structural integrity of the Apollo craft—which will have to return to earth under much greater pressure and heat than did the earlier vehicles.

Experts also are studying the possibility of modifying the breathing gas in the cabin. Pure oxygen under pressure is a dangerous fire hazard in the presence of a spark. It was chosen for Apollo because of its simplicity and the reliability gained in 16 manned space flights.

NASA is considering switching to an air-like oxygen-nitrogen system on the ground and during the launch phase and pressurizing to 100 per cent oxygen in orbit. The suits would remain on pure oxygen at all times.

Snuff Out Fire

In orbit, the cabin could be depressurized swiftly, snuffing out any fire in the vacuum of space. This can't be done on the ground because of pressure and oxygen in the air.

For future flights, it appears there is a possibility of only one manned Apollo mission this year, and that could slip into 1968 depending on the Apollo 1 findings.

The crew will be Air Force Lt. Col. James A. McDivitt and David R. Scott and civilian Russell L. Schweickart. They are to rendezvous and hook up with a lunar landing craft launched separately to practice all maneuvers for a moon journey.

of whom slashed the tires and took the ignition key from the driver.

"They demanded that the Soviet citizens leave the bus and tried to lynch them," Tass said.

The Soviet protest was sent off against a background of official feuding in Moscow between the Chinese Embassy and the Soviet Foreign Ministry.

Trade Charges

Both sides called news conferences to trade charges and countercharges arising from an incident at the wall of the Chinese Embassy Friday night.

The Chinese charged that 31 members of its staff, including three women and the acting ambassador, had been beaten by 170 Soviet "goons and youths" who tore down embassy display cases. The Chinese said the Russians had threatened them with axes and electric saws.

The Russians denied all the Chinese charges. They accused the Chinese of starting the fight, beating school children and throwing broken glass packed in snowballs at Soviet citizens.

Imminent Milk Holding Seen By NFO Head

EAU CLAIRE, Wis. (AP)—The president of the National Farmers Organization said Saturday its nationwide milk withholding action is "imminent" and can be avoided only if processors agree to raise prices to the producer.

"We feel a holding action is going to be necessary, otherwise dairy farmers will still be talking with processors 10 years from now," Oren Lee Staley of Cornish, Iowa, NFO president, told newsmen.

Staley conducted what he termed a "strategy" meeting with some 750 NFO county officers and bargaining committees throughout Wisconsin. The conference, closed to press and public, was held in the gymnasium of Eau Claire Memorial High School.

The NFO is seeking $6.05 per hundredweight for Grade A milk and $5 for manufacturing milk. Roughly this would amount to a $1 per hundredweight increase—about two cents per quart—for the farmer.

an American military police company at Phan Rang, on the coast 170 miles east of Saigon. Of 22 MPs in the barracks at the time, it said, 9 were wounded.

A hero of the Marine patrol's fight was a lance corporal, David E. Verbyn, 20, of Lenox, Mass. A dispatch from Da Nang said he had taken command and led in repulsing attacks by a Viet Cong detachment estimated at 60 men when the patrol leader and his assistant were killed in sharp fighting shortly after midnight.

The Marines had been dropped by helicopter Friday night on a hilltop 25 miles south of Quang Ngai. The men fought at times within hand grenade range.

Heavy Casualties

Spokesmen said the patrol's casualties were heavy, meaning there would have to be replacements to refit it for the field. Enemy losses were undetermined, but Verbyn, himself slightly wounded, said the Marines could hear guerrillas dragging bodies away through the bushes.

Enemy fire knocked out the patrol's radio early in the fight, so the Marines were unable to call in air or artillery support. Their radio silence, however, prompted an aerial search. Gunships and helicopters swooped in at dawn, shooting up the Viet Cong positions and plucking out the Marines for hospitalization.

It was one phase of the Marines' week-old Operation De Soto in which they have reported killing 83 guerrillas and capturing 110 tons of enemy rice.

Short Circuit Keeps Things Abuzz in City

OCEAN CITY, N.J. (AP)—Things were abuzz in Ocean City on Saturday—things like the entire police emergency telephone box system, and burglar alarms from two banks and a Roman Catholic church.

Only one telephone in police headquarters remained operative.

All the trouble, according to a spokesman for the New Jersey Bell Telephone Co., resulted from a short circuit caused by water seeping into an underground cable.

Squads rushed to the banks and the church, to be greeted by astonished guards. Then police had to go all over town to lift police box receivers from their hooks to stop them from ringing.

The trouble was expected to extend into the night.

Portugal Eyes Big Spending in Africa

LISBON (AP)—Portugal says it plans to spend the equivalent of more than $29 million fighting rebels in its East African colony of Mozambique this year. Portugal has some 35,000 military personnel assigned there and 70,000 others opposing rebels in Angola and Guinea in West Africa.

Milwaukee Police Kept Busy as Man, 80, Steals, Runs

MILWAUKEE (AP)—An 80-year-old man, captured after a two-mile chase on foot, was charged Saturday with robbing a mail box.

Police said Herman F. Zastrow, who was named in a federal warrant alleging mail theft, has spent some 35 years behind bars. They said three men saw him open a mail collection box with a homemade key, take out a canvas mail sack and run down an alley.

The three gave chase. Other persons called police. Two motorcycle officers finally cornered Zastrow who had slowed to a jog and at last to a brisk walk.

Officers said Zastrow had thrown away the mail sack in an alley.

WSU-O Sports Team Hurt by Ineligibilities

BY TIGER BROOKS
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

OSHKOSH — Semester exams have taken their toll at Wisconsin State University - Oshkosh, as they no doubt have at other schools throughout Wisconsin. Coaches' ulcers must surely ache up when records reveal that varsity players are "scholastically ineligible" for the second semester.

For some reason or other, the academic axe fell heavily on WSU-O athletes when semester grades came out. The basketball, wrestling, swimming and gymnastics teams all suffered the loss of at least two participants, some of whom were

Delta Sigma Phi Takes Title in Broom Hockey

OSHKOSH —Delta Sigma Phi, Nelson Hall, Chi Omega and Alpha Phi grabbed the first-place trophies in the Wisconsin State University - Oshkosh winter carnival games competition Saturday at Read Elementary School.

Cries of "Pull, pull" and "We're No. 1" plus numerous cheers for competing organizations rang out across the ice and snow behind the school where the semi-finals and finals took place. The men's organizations were competing in broom hockey and rope pulling, while the coeds tried their luck at locomotive relay and obstacle relay.

A few policemen were on hand to help control the hundreds of students and townspeople who braved icy winds and below freezing temperatures to watch the action and root for their favorites.

Free hot chocolate was available for all spectators and participants and the refreshment lines were long all afternoon. Students huddled together as they attempted to get a better vantage point to view the action.

Delta Sigma Phi took the broom hockey title with a courageous display of "icemanship", using brooms and a slightly deflated volleyball as their equipment. Nelson Hall grunted and groaned its way to first place in rope pulling, while Chi Omega survived the competition to win the obstacle relay event and Alpha Phi's girls took the locomotive relay title.

Top Teams in B Archery Loop Will Square Off

OSHKOSH — A key match looms on the horizon in the "B" league of the Oshkosh Recreation Department's Indoor Archery League, when Bell Machine and Oregon Clothing face each other a week from Wednesday, Feb. 15.

Bell Machine is unbeaten in the "B" loop, with a 6-0 mark, while Oregon is 5-1. Titan Tag is 3-3, Oshkosh Bowbenders, 2-5, and Kitz and Pfeil, 0-7, to round out the loop. Kingspins in the "A" league are the Hollow loggers, 8-0. Behind them are Mar's Drive Inn, 5-3, Hergert Sprt, 3-5, and Lincoln Contractors Supply, 0-8.

Shooting 240 or better in last week's action were Jack Thrig, who also hit two perfect ends; Clarence Koch, Bill Kolaske, Jerry Neubauer and Dave Bloechl, also all shooting one perfect end; Fred Rens, Bob Nagler, John Koch, Wayne LeDoyt, Kerry Stadler, Tom Place, Pete Christensen, Neubauer's 278 topped all individual scores.

Recreation Softball Commission to Meet

OSHKOSH — The 1967 season and managers' and umpires' meetings will be the topics for discussion when the Recreation Softball Commission meets at 7:30 p.m. Thursday at the home of Mickey Kerrigan, 734 Vine Ave.

Expected to attend the session are Dr. George Meyer, president; Ken Robl, vice president, and members Ed Mueller, Cliff Sehora and Killian Spanbauer key men at certain positions or in particular events.

We felt that Titan wrestling coach, Patrick O'Halloran hit the nail on the head when he said that in the future he would concentrate on building a nucleus of young men who can "cut it academically as well as athletically." There are always students who feel that education is a necessary evil connected with the extra-curricular activities of a university. On the other hand, we have known athletes who were not only stars in their particular sport but top performers in the classroom. Some were straight-A students in tough fields, others were good enough to make National Honor Society listings or earn a position on "All Scholastic" teams.

It's interesting to note that of the 18 athletes declared "scholastically ineligible" at WSU-O, nine are sophomores and seven are freshmen. Only one junior and senior are included.

Campus newcomers often have fits of overexuberance when it comes to extra-curricular activities. They join everything in sight, go out for sports and, in some cases, hold down jobs. There's nothing wrong with this enthusiasm if they can cut the buck academically. But paying hard-earned cash just to have a social life, find a marriage partner or make the sports pages is ridiculous.

GRAPEVINE GRAVY — Look for the Harlem Globetrotters to make their annual Oshkosh appearance sometime within the next two months. They still draw crowds but, ho hum, once you've seen them . . .

North Carolina Beats Maryland For 14th Victory

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — With all five of its starters hitting in double figures, second ranked North Carolina led Maryland all the way to take an 85-77 victory in an Atlantic Coast Conference basketball game here Saturday.

The Terrapins, who trailed 64-42 midway of the second half, came back in the closing minutes to narrow the margin to eight points at the finish.

Larry Miller and Rusty Clark led the Tar Heel shooters with 20 points each. Rich Drescher led Maryland with 17.

The victory was North Carolina's fifth straight and gives the Tar Heels a 14-1 over-all record and 6-0 in the ACC. Maryland is 9-7 over-all and 4-5 in the ACC.

Hinn's 300 Game Tops Big Week for Kiekhaefer Bowlers

OSHKOSH—It was a memorable week for Kiekhaefer Corp., employees who use some of their spare time bowling at T and O lanes.

Twenty-six-year-old Roy Hinn Jr., 46 Myrna Jane Dr., who works at the Fond du Lac plant, opened Thursday night's action in the 32-team Lutheran league by rolling a perfect 300 game. He added a 202 and 199 to finish the night with a 701 series, first for him in seven years of bowling.

Terrell Has 39-4 Record

Clay Rated 4 to 1 Favorite

By JACK HAND
HOUSTON (AP) — Cassius Clay, still appealing his 1-A status in the military draft, will defend his disputed world heavyweight title for the eighth time Monday night in the Astro-dome against Ernie Terrell, recognized as champ by the World Boxing Association.

Clay is a 4-1 favorite with little betting interest reported by legal Las Vegas bookmaking establishments.

The 15-round match in the unique domed arena is expected to boost the 25-year-old Clay's earnings since he won the title from Sonny Liston close to the $3 million mark.

About 35,000 fans are expected to watch the bout in person and many thousands more will see it on closed circuit television or via the two satellites to Europe and Asia. The scrap also will be carried on radio by the Mutual Broadcasting System.

The two fighters are due to enter the ring at 10:30 p.m. EST and actual fighting is due to begin at about 10:40 p.m. EST.

Reach Advantage
For the first time in his career as champ, Clay will be taking on an opponent with an advantage in height and reach. Clay, 6-foot-2½ inches, with a 78-inch reach, will be facing a stiff left jab thrown by the 6-6 Terrell with his 82-inch reach.

Salvino Wins $10,000 Prize In Pin Meet

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Carmel Salvino of Chicago eked out a 211-203 victory over Johnny Guenther of Seattle Saturday and captured the $10,000 first prize in the Professional Bowlers Association $50,000 St. Paul Open.

It was a heartbreak loss for Guenther, who needed a second strike in the 10th frame to win the nationally-televised title match.

Guenther buried the ball in the 1-3 pocket, but the 10-pin stood. Guenther was never ahead as Salvino strung four straight strikes from the second frame through the fifth.

It was Salvino's eighth PBA championship, including the PBA national title in 1962.

Guenther collected $5,000 for finishing second, while Barry Asher of Santa Ana, Calif., was third for $2,500, Jack Biondollo of Houston fourth for $2,000 and Bill Lillard of Dallas fifth for $1,500.

Bart Would Make Good Indian Fighter

GREEN BAY — This comes from the Chicago Tribune: What an Indian fighter Bart Starr would make. Whv, in the Super Bowl he eluded 11 Chiefs and captured 15 thousand backs.

One pin higher for the series high was left-hander Marvin Becker, who fired games of 243, 203 and 256 for a 702 count, his best in competition. Becker, who has also been been bowling "six or seven years", holds a 185 average. He is employed at Kiekhaefer's.

Clay, who prefers to be known as Muhammad Ali and is appealing his draft status on Muslim ministerial grounds, has a perfect 27-0 record with 22 knockouts. He won the crown when Liston quit in his corner at Miami Beach, Feb. 25, 1964. In two 1965 defenses he wiped out Liston in one round and stopped Floyd Patterson, another ex-champ, in 12 rounds at Las Vegas.

Beloit Mermen Edge Vikings

House Breaks Record; Mitchell Wins 3 Events

A disqualification that was over-ruled in the afternoon's final event provided Beloit College with its margin of victory over the Lawrence swim team Saturday at the Alexander Gym Pool.

The final score was 53-42, but had the Bucs' 400-yard freestyle relay team been disqualified, the verdict would have been reversed with the Vikes on top, 49-46.

The dispute broke out when the assistant judge ruled that Beloit's last man in the relay had a false take-off, thus disqualifying the relay unit and giving Lawrence the meet victory.

On an appeal from the Beloit coach which correctly claimed that the assistant judge did not have the authority to make such a ruling, starter Don Boya over-ruled the disqualification.

Vike captain Pete House set the meet's lone record, a new varsity and pool mark in the 50-yard freestyle with a :22.5 timing. House held the old record of :22.7.

Doc Mitchell won three individual events and House two. Mitchell captured the 200-yard individual medley, the 200-yard butterfly and the 500-yard freestyle. House took a blue ribbon in the 50 and 100-yard freestyles.

Carl Liebich splashed to victory in the 200-yard freestyle and Vern Wilmot won the diving competition for the Vikes' other firsts. Lawrence won seven events, compared to Beloit's four.

OSHKOSH — Lourdes High School wrestlers will compete in the state Catholic high school wrestling tournament Friday and Saturday at Kenosha.

Fifteen teams are entered in the event, with the lone Fox Valley Catholic Conference representatives being the Knights and Green Bay Premontre.

Eau Claire Regis has dropped the sport, but the addition of Premontre brings the number of entries to 15, according to Chuck Morrill, Lourdes coach.

Kenosha St. Joseph, is defending champion, but Marshfield Columbus, Milwaukee Don Bosco and LaCrosse Aquinas are expected to make good bids to upset the Kenoshans. Lourdes finished 12th last year, in its first year of competition, but Morrill expects his boys to do better this time.
